Bickering on Sohio terminal grows

By John Sheehan
Staff Writer

Two Long Beach Harbor commissioners Sunday denied a report that the Port of Long Beach has been working behind the scenes to rid itself of Standard Oil of Ohio's proposed oil terminal.

The denials by the board's two most recent appointees, Reed M. Williams and E. John Hanna, came as the state official responsible for the report Saturday expanded his charge.

At the same time, local air quality officials were mustering support to defuse what several called "a grandstand play" by Tom Quinn, the brash young chairman of the State Air Resources Board.

Two members of the Southern California Air Quality Management District (AQMD) said Quinn's announcement late last week to hold hearings on the Sohio project was undercutting their authority and integrity.

"We're not happy with Quinn at all," one said. "He's walked all over us."

The state official, meanwhile, an aide in the Brown administration, said Sunday that rather than just "jawbone" for rejection of the Sohio terminal, the port collaborated with the Exxon Corp. to lobby for legislation that would have given the port a legal means to reject Sohio.

The collaboration, the aide said, was on an amendment to the new federal tanker safety law recently signed by President Carter.

"The port and Exxon lobbied congressmen intensely for an amendment that, if attached to the bill, would have made Sohio tankers unacceptable in the Port of Long Beach," the aide said.

"The Port would then have had legal justification to reject Sohio's operating application.

"The amendment failed after a pretty bitter fight," he said. "It

No break in port strike

Striking clerks continued to picket five terminals in the Long Beach and Los Angeles harbors Sunday. "We're awfully far apart," said attorney Al Slight, spokesman for the four struck cargo-handling companies.

Joe Argento, president of the Marine Clerks Union Local 13 of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union (ILWU) said the negotiations might resume after the holiday. "It's up to the employers," he said.

Members of the clerks union went out on strike Friday after negotiations ended Thursday night. There are about 93 members on strike. Other longshoremen's locals have said they are honoring the clerks' picket lines.

At the International Transportation Service terminal in Long Beach, strikers said two trucks turned around after the drivers saw picket signs. However, there was little activity in general in the harbors Sunday because of the Fourth of July holiday weekend.

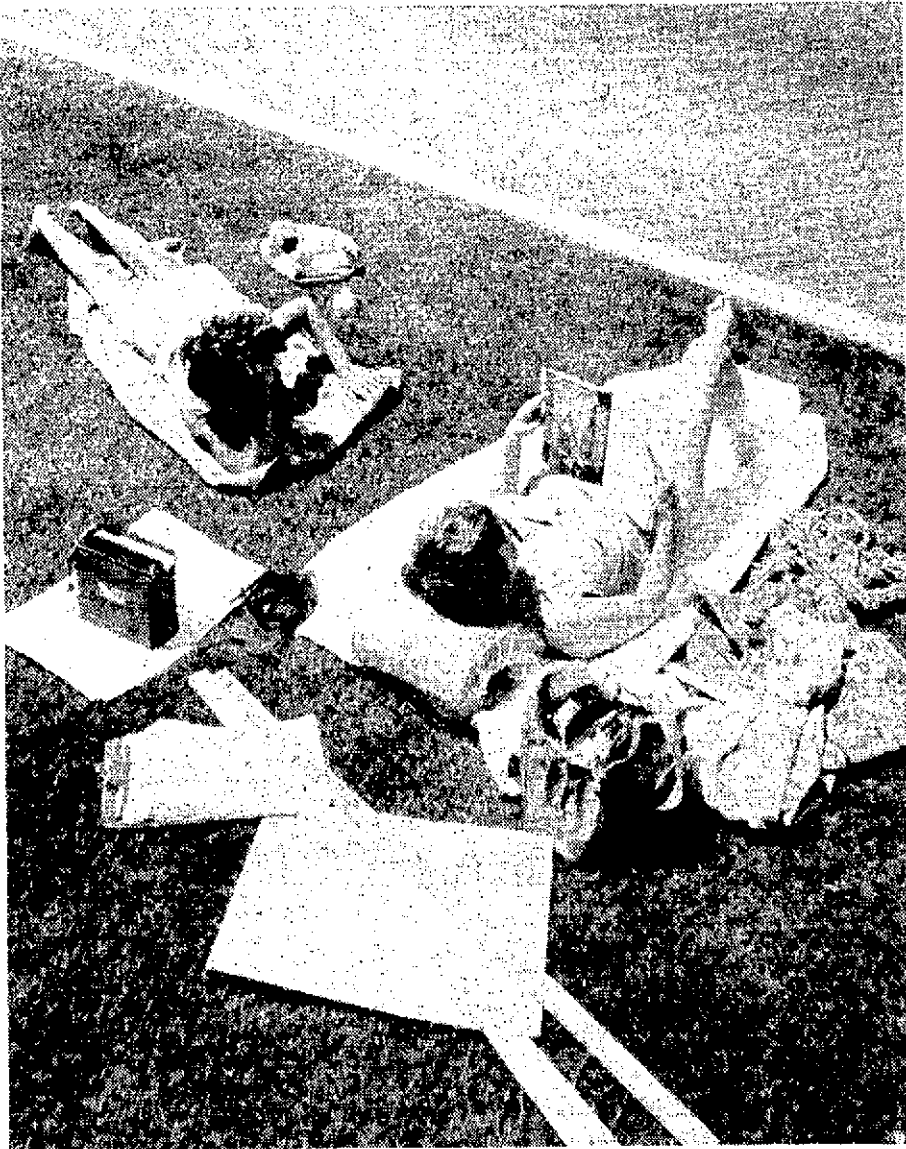

SLAUGHT, A NEWPORT BEACH attorney, has said the companies offered an 11.8-per cent wage increase in the first year plus an additional 30.3 per cent increase over a three-year period. Argento said the union is asking for a 32 per cent hike over two years.

Saturday, five workers at Standard Fruit Co. in Long Beach agreed to return to work today in order to save perishable cargo, leaving four companies affected by the strike.

Besides ITS, Marine Terminals Corp. in Long Beach also has been struck. James McJunkin, assistant general manager of the Port of Long Beach, said both companies handle a total of about 2 million tons of cargo per year out of 32 million tons handled at the port.

Also struck in Los Angeles Harbor are the Marine Terminals Corp. terminal there, the Los Angeles Container Terminal and American President Lines.

Although five ships reportedly were diverted Friday because of the strike, none has been diverted since, according to the Marine Exchange which keeps records of port arrivals and departures. One of the five ships is anchored in Long Beach harbor. Two pickets are on duty at the terminal gates. They work in four-hour shifts, 24 hours per day.

STRIKERS RELAX Sunday from picketing duty outside the International Transportation Service terminal at Long Beach Harbor. Lyndell Pritchett, left, and Pennie Murray spent their four-hour shift reading, listening to the radio and "shivering" in the chilly wind.

Huey home to big welcome—and trial

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Black Panther leader Huey P. Newton, facing murder and assault charges, returned to a hero's welcome Sunday night after 2½ years of self-imposed exile in Cuba. He quickly was taken into custody and whisked to Oakland.

Before he was escorted from San Francisco International Airport by Oakland police, Newton addressed the crowd of hundreds of supporters who hailed him with shouts of "Free Huey."

Newton's greeters, some carrying "Justice for Huey Newton" banners, pushed forward for a glimpse of the Black Panther co-founder when he arrived from Canada.

"I'M GLAD to be back with you," a beaming Newton said as he stood on an airline counter with his wife and Elaine Brown, party chairperson. "Stay with me and we'll come closer together. . . . I will be acquitted in spite of an unfair trial."

Newton claimed the charges against him in Oakland were "only a further attempt to frame me and the Black Panther Party." He said he decided to end his exile in Cuba because he believes Senate committee disclosures about CIA and FBI activities have "raised peoples' consciousness."

After Newton's brief speech he was taken out a side door, disappointing dozens of small children who had lined up to greet him.

A San Mateo County Sheriff's deputy said Newton was taken into custody by Oakland police for transportation back to Oakland.

Black Panthers' battle cry is now community service. Page B-5.

Alameda County Deputy Dist. Atty. Tom Orloff said charges against Newton arise from four separate incidents but are contained in a single complaint. The charges are:

—Murder. Newton is alleged to have shot a 17-year-old girl on Aug. 6, 1974. She died after he fled the United States.

—Assault with a deadly weapon. This stems from Newton's alleged pistol whipping of his tailor in Newton's Lake Merritt Penthouse on Aug. 16, 1974.

—Assault on a policeman and felony resisting arrest. Newton allegedly was involved in an altercation with police officers in a bar in Oakland on July 30, 1974. Newton's associate Robert Heard was convicted of assault on a policeman and a gun charge in the case.

—False imprisonment. This charge stems from an incident in an Oakland bar. Orloff said the alleged victims were two women but he could not provide details about the case.

Nation marks birthday 201

Associated Press

A sparkling parade of sailing craft drew tens of thousands of spectators to New York City's waterfront Sunday in a nautical salute to America on the nation's 201st birthday.

The Parade of Sail around the tip of Manhattan was but a small part of the celebration that promised to touch almost every city and town in the country today, the Fourth of July.

Comments along the East and Hudson riverfronts ranged from "very beautiful" to "very nice" but the spectacle suffered, as planners expected, from comparison with Operation Sail, the display of tall ships and wind-jammers that commemorated

Traffic toll mounting

33 dead in state; six killed in L.B. area

The holiday traffic death toll, heading toward record numbers for a Fourth of July weekend, continued to grow in the Southland Sunday.

While the California Highway Patrol said the statewide total reached 33 Sunday, Southland totals late in the day showed eight persons have died in this area since 6 p.m. Friday evening.

The statewide figures were more than double the death toll during the same period last year, a CHP spokesman said.

"There are just more cars out on the road this year. We don't have any gasoline shortage and people aren't afraid of getting in their car and taking off," the spokesman said.

In the Southern California area, the death toll grew when a 20-year-old Whittier man died about 2 a.m. Sunday following a collision with another auto attempting to pass his car. Rudolph Morales, 11532 Walnut St., was killed instantly when his car spun out of control on Norwalk Boulevard near Telegraph Road, Santa Fe Springs.

A passenger in Morales car, Ruben Sanchez, 21, of La Puente, was taken to the USC Medical Center in serious condition with internal injuries. The driver of the second car was not held.

A 19-year-old Pasadena man, meanwhile, surrendered to police Sunday after allegedly leaving the scene of a fatal motorcycle crash just after midnight Saturday. Booked on suspicion of felony hit and run was Alex Badir, whose car police said struck Phillip Ranson, 19, also of Pasadena, as he rode his motorcycle near his home.

In Orange, Juan Martinez, 22, was killed and a companion, Jose Lagunas, 24, seriously injured when the two were struck by a car as they walked across the street late Saturday. Both men, of 218 W. Hoover St., Orange, were struck in the intersection of Glassell Street and Quincy Avenue about 10 p.m. Saturday. The driver of the vehicle was not held.

A 16-year-old Norwalk boy was killed when the car he was riding in slammed into an empty, parked car about 5:15 p.m. Saturday. Deputies said Raymond Roth, address unknown, died when the car rammed a second vehicle near Foster Road on Curtis King Road.

The 16-year-old driver, unidentified because of his age, was booked for suspicion of vehicular manslaughter.

Wife held in L.B. slaying

A 61-year-old Long Beach man was beaten with a hammer and strangled Sunday night. His 52-year-old wife was booked on suspicion of murder.

Alfred Haskell Guthrie, of 4550 Montair Ave., Apt. F-6, was pronounced dead at the scene. Mrs. Peggy Ann Guthrie told officers she and her husband argued shortly after they returned home — at separate times — at about 8 p.m. She said her husband locked her out of their apartment during the argument, and she grabbed a hammer to beat her way back inside.

New, sophisticated thieves

Computer crime soaring

By Richard D. Lyons
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — The increasing dependence of virtually every element of society on computers to transfer funds and store information has bred a new type of sophisticated thief who is presenting law enforcement officials with a technological update of the calculated crime.

In the world of American funny business there is a bull market in computer-related crimes ranging from the outright manipulation of electronic financial accounts, through the alteration and destruction of stored data, to the theft of electronic information. At least 500 computer-assisted crimes have been documented, and the best estimates are that this digital depredation now costs American business $300 million a year.

The exact extent of computer crime is unknown, since most of its perpetrators go unnoticed. Even if caught, computer thieves are seldom convicted because of the vagueness of laws covering the new phenomenon. Eight senators introduced a bill last week that would set stiff penalties for either the theft from or the invasion of computers belonging to the federal government as well as those being used privately in interstate commerce.

The bill deals not only with overt fraud and the theft of "money, property, or services," but also sets the same penalties of up to 15 years in jail and a fine of $50,000 for "whoever, intentionally and without authorization, directly or indirectly accesses, alters, damages, or destroys any computer, computer system, or computer network . . . or any computer software, program, or data contained" in these types of electronic equip-

OPEC resolves oil price split

Combined News Services

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates Sunday announced a 5 per cent increase in the price of their oil, thus bringing to an end the oil price split that has plagued the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries for the last six months. The original split came with 11 member states raised the price of their crude by 10 per cent as of Jan. 1 and promised another 5 per cent increase on July 1. At that time, Saudi Arabia and the UAE agreed only to a one-time, 5 per cent rise. Sunday's increase, then, puts all OPEC members in accord on 1977 prices.

Africa disputes head talks

LIBREVILLE, Gabon — Questions involving disputes among African nations overshadowed discussion of strategies for liberating southern Africa as the heads of state and government of the Organization of African Unity began their first full session Sunday. A third of the 18 items on the agenda were related directly to the disputes that threaten the elusive concept of continental solidarity. Among them are the long-standing hostilities between Algeria and Morocco over the territories of the former Spanish Sahara, the charge by Chad that Libya has seized part of its territory, and a conflict between the Comoros and Madagascar. The agenda includes an item presented with conflicting emphases by Senegal and Algeria, dealing with foreign intervention in the internal affairs of OAU member states. "The only issue that really matters here," said an Egyptian delegate, "is that of Soviet interference in Africa."

Turkish government falls

ANKARA, Turkey — Turkish Premier Bulent Ecevit resigned Sunday after his 10-day-old center-left government was defeated on its first vote of confidence in parliament by a coalition of rightist parties. The 229-217 defeat of Ecevit's minority Republican People's party government raised the probability of a return to shaky right-wing coalition rule under former Premier Suleyman Demirel and another political crisis in this North Atlantic alliance nation.

Cruise deployment hit

MOSCOW — Angered by President Carter's decisions to deploy the Cruise missile, the Soviet Union said Sunday that the atmosphere for concluding a new arms limitations agreement has only deteriorated since Secretary of State Cyrus Vance visited Moscow in March. Pravda commentator Oleg Skalkin said "the course of events since the visit to Moscow of the Secretary of State of the U.S.A., C. Vance, unfortunately has only deepened doubt about the sincerity of the American administration on this cardinal question (a new SALT agreement.)"

Klan rally wrecker drunk

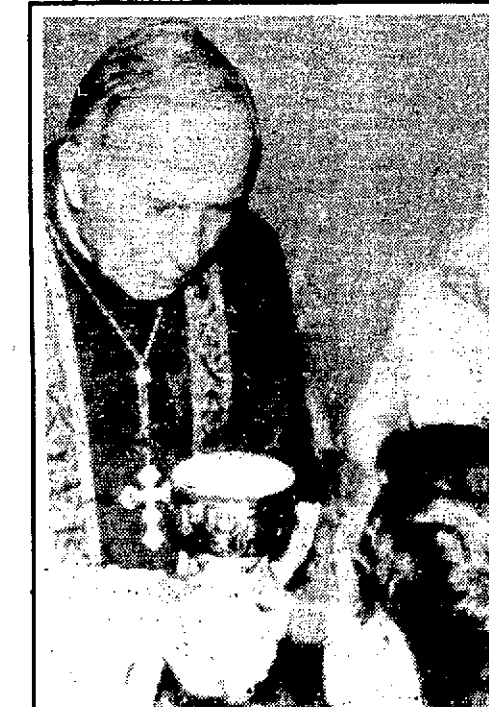

AMERICUS, Ga. — A man accused of racing his sports car into a crowd of 250 people at a Ku Klux Klan rally in President Carter's hometown was legally drunk at the time and apparently aiming for the Klan's imperial wizard, the sheriff said Sunday. Bill Wilkinson, Klan leader from Denham Springs, La., was addressing the outdoor rally in Plains at sunset Saturday, when a man revved up his Jaguar and smashed at between 50 to 60 miles per hour under the speakers' platform and into the crowd, witnesses said. Of the 32 persons injured, 19 required hospitalization, many with broken bones. Neither Wilkinson nor any of about 50 white-robed members of the white supremacist group attending the rally was hurt.

New Rhodesia talks set

LONDON — British envoy John Graham left London Sunday for a week of talks with black and white leaders in Africa on Anglo-American efforts to arrange a transition to black majority rule in Rhodesia. Graham and his American counterpart, Stephen Low, the U.S. ambassador to Zambia, were scheduled to meet Wednesday in Lusaka, Zambia, with black nationalists leading the four-year-old fight against the white minority government of Prime Minister Ian Smith. The envoys were to meet with Smith in Salisbury after their talks with the black leaders.

Israel devaluates money

JERUSALEM — Israel devalued its currency by about 2 per cent Sunday, to 9.57 Israeli pounds to the U.S. dollar, the government announced. The previous rate was 9.44 to the dollar.

Carter hurls 9 innings, loses

Combined News Services

At Camp David, Md. Sunday, President Carter pitched nine innings of losing softball as his White House team was defeated by a team of U.S. Marines.

White House spokeswoman Pat Barrio said she did not know the final score. But she quoted White House catcher Fran Voorde, who is Carter's scheduling director, as saying, "we won the first seven innings and they won the last two." It was Carter's first outing on the mound since post-election days in his hometown of Plains, Ga., when he pitched for a Carter campaign team against reporters. The Marines who defeated the White House team guard the presidential mountain retreat.

Ms. Voorde is the regular pitcher for the White House team that plays frequent games in Washington.

Earlier, Carter and his family attended Sunday services conducted by Lt. Col. Cecil Reed, Army chaplain from neighboring Ft. Ritchie.

The White House spokeswoman said the President was aware of an incident in Plains Saturday night, in which a man drove his car into a crowd of people at a Ku Klux Klan rally. Carter had no comment.

The Carters flew to Camp David from the White House Friday afternoon and will return today in time to watch a July 4th fireworks display at the Washington monument grounds.

Friedman

Milton Friedman, the U.S. economist mentioned as a possible adviser to Prime Minister Menachem Begin, arrived Sunday to accept an honorary degree from the Hebrew University in Jerusalem.

Friedman told reporters at Ben-Gurion International Airport that he would not become a permanent adviser to the Likud party's regime. "But I will gladly meet any Likud party officials," he said.

'Better deal'

Support by the National Education Association made a critical difference in the election of President Carter, the organization's president, John Ryor, said Sunday.

Ryor, addressing the opening session of the NEA's convention in Minneapolis, said the NEA parted from tradition and endorsed Carter for president "because we were convinced that education and educators in America would receive a better deal from a Carter-Mondale administration than from a Ford-Dole administration."

Ryor, a Michigan teacher, said the Carter administration "has not produced everything we would like to see" since his election.

But he said the NEA is satisfied with "significant gains," including an additional $1 billion in this year's budget for education.

'Bulldog'

R.D. "Bulldog" Smith, national commander-in-chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, says veterans should fight together to preserve their benefits.

Smith told Virginia's VFW convention Saturday night in Roanoke, "We better get busy and let our senators and congressmen know" that veterans won't stand for administrative action endangering benefits guaranteed by acts of Congress.

He pointed, as an example, to a U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare study that recommends placing the veterans' pension program under HEW control.

Smith also renewed his opposition to a National Institutes of Health study that suggests phasing the Veterans Administration hospital system into the public health care area.

Birchers

The federal government wants to enslave the American people by taking away their guns and increasing the powers of regulatory agencies, a John Birch Society official told society members gathered in Colorado Springs for a Fourth of July rally.

Charles Smith said plans for the enslavement of the American people are part of a conspiracy that could lead to a worldwide dictatorship.

Smith said the group is trying to educate the American people so they will not support any federal agency that increases the size or power of the federal government.

HAPPY FATHER Jay Wiltse, 88, feeds his 4½-month-old daughter Heather Lynn in Independence, Wis. —AP Wirephoto

Couple happily wed despite 50-year gap

When Jay Wiltse and his wife, Marian, were married 12 years ago, a priest predicted the marriage wouldn't last six months.

"But we fooled him," said Wiltse, 88, who with his 38-year-old wife is the proud father of a 4½-month-old daughter, Heather Lynn, and a 12-year-old son, Jay Jr.

"My mother always told me I should marry an older man with money. Only I haven't found his money yet," Mrs. Wiltse said.

The marriage is her first and his third. Wiltse outlived his two previous wives.

The Wiltse have been proprietors of Marian's Cafe in Independence, Wis. since 1969, specializing in dinners and short orders.

Wiltse, who stands 5 feet, 7 inches and weighs 152 pounds, credits his stamina and virility to hard work and the four capsules of Vitamin E that he takes every day.

He says he's in comparatively good health, although he has had a cough for the past couple of years. But he said his doctor has assured him the cough will wear away in time.

If he didn't work, Wiltse maintains, "I would die within two months."

He works the morning shift at the cafe, opening up at 5 a.m., and Mrs. Wiltse works the night shift, sometimes as late as 3 a.m.

The couple met in Janesville, Wis., in 1961, when she was working at a restaurant and he was employed at a tavern. They dated about four years before they married in January 1965.

Mrs. Wiltse confessed that she wasn't convinced at first that they would stay together very long. "But we made 'er go," she added.

For entertainment, Wiltse said he and his wife mostly go out for dinner and once in a while to the theater. He said they used to go dancing, but with the long hours at the restaurant they no longer have time for that.

"When she wants to go, she goes, and I go to bed," he said. "A person my age has to have a lot of rest, you know."

Atlantic crossing bid fails

Bob Magoon and his three-man crew arrived in Boston Sunday night, after abandoning their attempt on the trans-Atlantic powerboat speed record because of worsening weather and mechanical problems.

"I don't like being a loser, but the weather made us decide to stop," Magoon said. "I'd like to try again next year."

He said that because of the impending Atlantic hurricane season, he would not try another assault this year on the 25-year-old record of 82 hours and 40 minutes, set by the liner United States on her maiden voyage in 1952.

The Miami eye surgeon-vessel, the "Citicorp Traveler," left the U.S. Naval base at Rota, Spain on July 1, with a first refueling stop planned in the Azores.

But the 36-foot boat, powered by four 200-horsepower outboard engines and modified to carry 1,800 gallons of fuel, encountered foul weather — including waves of 10-15 feet — and small mechanical problems, including a broken fitting on a fuel tank.

Then, the craft ran out of gas 150 miles out of Ponta Delgada in the Azores. The powerboat was towed into Ponta Delgada by a tanker, and then by a Portuguese Navy corvette.

Jury unemployment

I was laid off from my job and at about the same time I was called for jury duty. The California Employment Development Department refuses to pay me unemployment benefits while I'm serving on a jury, and I don't understand why I should be penalized for doing my civic duty. R.H., Long Beach.

You apparently were misinformed. If you earned a sufficient amount of wages from an employer who paid unemployment insurance taxes, you can collect benefits while you're serving on a jury, according to an EDD spokeswoman.

Jury duty is considered part-time employment even if a person is tied up for 40 hours a week, and EDD will pay you the amount of benefits you're entitled to less any weekly jury earnings in excess of $18.

If a person who had been working full time is laid off and gets a regular part-time job which pays him less than the maximum amount of the jobless benefits he's entitled to, he can collect unemployment payments. As with jury earnings, EDD will deduct any part-time wages over $18 a week from his benefits. But if an unemployed person gets a full-time job that pays less than the amount he could collect in unemployment payments, he isn't eligible for benefits.

Klan

Would you please tell us what the Ku Klux Klan membership requirements are? Why should anyone aspire to membership in this organization? J.R.J., Long Beach.

To become a KKK member, you must be at least 18 years old, an American citizen, a Christian caucasian, believe in the U.S. Constitution and "agree to work for the advancement of the preservation and protection of white people, white interests and ideals," David E. Duke, of Baton Rouge, La., national director of the organization, told Action Line.

He said the group attracts members who are racist, opposed to racial integration and who believe that the U.S. should be oriented toward the needs of white people. "The interest of the majority should not be subverted to that of the minority, as it now is being done in this country," Duke said.

Goal of the Klan, whose bloody, 100-year history has been widely denounced, is for "political strength for our philosophy of life. What we believe in is quality people. We believe that the key element in society is the quality of people."

Among the most pressing concerns of members of the right-wing extremist group today are opposing integration, reverse discrimination and the immigration of minorities, especially Mexicans, into the country.

Membership information for the Southern California area is available from Tom Metzger, P.O. Box 65, Fallbrook, Calif. 92028.

Ring

In January I took an emerald crystal cluster to Jewelry Design, 178 Marina Drive, Seaport Village, and commissioned them to design a ring. There were a few problems in the making of the ring and some of the work had to be redone.

When I got the ring in May, I discovered, to my horror, that they had broken the cluster in many places and the stone had been epoxied into the mounting. I complained to the owner, but got no satisfaction.

The gemologist who sold me the cluster looked at the ring and gave me a written statement saying the cluster had been chipped in several places and the ring had been "improperly and unprofessionally made." What recourse do I have? I feel I should get my money back. M.J.M., Long Beach.

Deanna Hoffman, owner of Jewelry Design, says she does not feel she owes you a refund. She maintains your cluster was not damaged in her store. "If there was damage to the ring, it was done after it left this shop," she told Action Line. She said it is normal procedure to use a small amount of epoxy glue on the bottom of the setting to act as a cushioning agent.

"The customer was radiant beyond belief when she left here with the ring," Miss Hoffman said. "She has been misinformed by her gemologist, and I will go to court to testify to this fact."

Inmate hangs himself after escape fails

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — One of four jail inmates who held two hostages for more than six hours last week hanged himself in his cell at the Nebraska Penal Complex Saturday, Lancaster County Atty. Ron Lahners said Sunday.

Lahners said Ronald Routhier's death was definitely a suicide and there would be no further investigation.

Routhier, 22, from Niagara Falls, N.Y., and three other prisoners in the county-city jail in Lincoln held a jailer and a deputy U.S. marshal hostage in an escape attempt before surrendering early Tuesday.

Police seek bar gunman

Long Beach police are seeking a gunman who took $250 from the cash register at the Broadway Cocktail Lounge, 1100 E. Broadway.

Police described the man as between 25-30 years old, about 5-foot-9, 145 pounds, with dark hair and a moustache. The man entered the bar about 11 p.m. Thursday and forced a barmaid, at gunpoint, to give him the money. He fled on foot.

Young sisters killed in fire

PORT HURON, Mich. (AP) — Two young sisters were killed Sunday and two adults injured when fire swept through their two-story frame house. A third child escaped injury.

The mother of the girls, aged 8 and 5, was hospitalized in fair condition after suffering smoke inhalation.

A 24-year-old man was in serious condition with extensive burns suffered when he tried to rescue the two young girls.

Port Huron firemen said the three children were asleep upstairs when the fire began in a wastebasket in the living room downstairs. The boy ran downstairs and alerted the two adults.

CROWDED SHORELINE at bay in Belmont Shore held many of more than 100,000 beachgoers in Long Beach Sunday, part of a million-plus beach day in

Million turn out for 'near perfect' day at beaches

Southland beaches drew more than a million people Sunday — including over 100,000 at Long Beach — and lifeguards expect an even larger turnout today as "near perfect" summer weather continues.

In Long Beach, where highs of 78 degrees matched up with water temperatures of 64, lifeguards said Sunday's turnout was "the largest of the summer."

The National Weather Service, meanwhile, forecast a clear sky with temperatures reaching the 80-degree mark today.

The California Highway Patrol issued several traffic sigalerts in the Malibu area, where bumper to bumper tie-ups along Pacific Coast Highway made driving miserable beneath the cloudless sky.

While thousands poured onto Southern California beaches, lifeguards said rescues were routine, with no drownings reported from Topanga in Los Angeles County all the way to San Clemente.

A Coast Guard spokesman, however, said the search for a 39-year-old Los Angeles man lost overboard late Saturday had been called off about 1 p.m. Sunday.

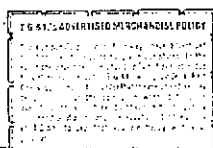

Roger Roseram fell from his 32-foot sailboat about 8 p.m. Saturday while working on the rigging a half mile off San Clemente Island. Coast Guard cutters and a helicopter searched the seas throughout the morning hours without success.

the Bicentennial last year.

SPIRITS nationwide seemed as high as ever, but the celebration was perhaps less intense than a year ago, the nation's 200th birthday. A barometer was fireworks sales in South Carolina.

Sales, said one dealer, were "real good, not as good as last year... but good."

Philadelphia, the "Cradle of Democracy," planned a big parade and fireworks today, with much of the activity centered around Independence Hall. Singer Frank Sinatra was in the historic city to receive the Freedom Medal.

A quarter-million visitors were expected for the traditional fireworks display on the grounds of the Washington Monument.

In Boston, big crowds were expected to hear a 21-gun salute from cannons aboard the USS Constitution, "Old Ironsides." A mammoth fireworks demonstration was planned, along with a waterfront appearance by Arthur Fiedler and his Boston Pops orchestra, playing Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture."

Cities and towns in Massachusetts, where the American Revolution began, planned traditional activities — parades, memorial services, concerts and community picnics.

ORGANIZERS said the Fourth of July parade planned for Boston was the oldest in the country. They said they expected more than 100,000 spectators for the event.

Celebrations ranged from the unusual — the All-Indian Pow Wow in Prescott, Ariz., or the Civil War-era tent city in Sacramento — to the more traditional, like "America's most jubilant celebration" in Asheville, Ohio.

"Old Fashioned" was a term used without restraint in places like Pittsburgh and Salt Lake City to describe plans big and small. But that didn't detract from the more unusual, such as:

—The second annual "502 Derby" in Madera, Calif., a team-roping rodeo limited to those cited for drunken driving in the past year. The number 502 is an old highway patrol code for drunken driving.

—Continuation of the Freedom Week celebration in Brownwood, Tex., complete with a visit from singer Anita Bryant, notable for her role in a successful effort to defeat a gay-rights ordinance in Miami.

—An attempt in Detroit to fly 1,776 kites on one line to beat the record of 1,585 listed in the Guinness Book of World Records. Restaurateur Chuck Muer, chairman of the Bicentennial Children's Kite Festival last year, sponsored the effort.

—The 10,000-meter Peachtree Road Race through downtown Atlanta, featuring Olympic stars Lasse Viren of Finland and Frank Shorter of the U.S.

—And what could be the nation's shortest Independence Day parade, a three-block march down the main street in Johnson, Wash.

Jefferson's memory 'faulty'

First 4th a 'hot-cool' day

By Donald Sanders

WASHINGTON (AP) — What was it like in Philadelphia on July 4, 1776?

Was it hot or cold? Was the Declaration of Independence signed in the morning or in the evening?

The questions seem insignificant, but they highlight the reliability or lack of it in materials on which American history is written, some of them ambiguous or divergent.

The Library of Congress has delved into the matter, in an article by Paul H. Smith of the American Revolutionary Office. He has turned up conflicting evidence.

"Of course it adds little to our understanding of the meaning of the Declaration of Independence to know that it was adopted on a relatively cool Fourth of July," Smith wrote, "but it is salutary for Americans to know upon what evidence our beliefs rest, and more than merely useful to stop occasionally to examine the nature of those sources."

Thomas Jefferson wrote in one of his journals that the Continental Congress adopted the declaration in the evening after a long day's debate.

Smith, editing a multivolume compilation of letters written by delegates, came across one written on July 4, 1776, by a committee of the Continental Congress, which he thinks proves that the Declaration was approved in the morning.

The chief issue before it was to consider emergency measures to be taken in defense against British troops which had just landed on Staten Island.

A committee was appointed after the declaration was adopted, but its letters say: "The Congress this morning directed us to confer

... about the proper mode of collecting the militia of this province ..."

Smith has concluded from other studies that Jefferson's notes about that historic day were written several years after the event, rather than on the spot, and that his memory may have been faulty.

A number of secondary accounts describe the day as unbearably hot, but Smith found a diary from a Massachusetts delegate, Robert Treat Paine, which said Philadelphians experienced a cool day on that July 4.

"Thomas Jefferson's testimony has long been a standard source for information on this period of American history," the library said, "but recently discovered evidence reveals that Jefferson's memory failed him on some crucial details when he compiled his notes."

'Illegal' aliens seek jobs in L.A. at 900-a-day rate

Associated Press

In a dramatic turnaround following a federal court ruling, thousands of aliens who entered the U.S. illegally and faced deportation now camp on the government's doorstep, looking for jobs.

Even if they are illegally in this country, they can't be deported. U.S. District Court Judge John F. Grady in Chicago put a hold on the status of 137,000 aliens nationwide last March pending final settlement of a case disputing immigration quotas.

"The ruling makes legal a whole lot of aliens who are now eligible to work," Immigration and Naturalization Service spokesman Robert Seitz said in Los Angeles.

Since the ruling, more than 26,000 "illegals" have been given work cards in Los Angeles, with up to 900 persons a day — many spending the night in line on the doorstep — coming through the same building that usually houses illegal aliens awaiting deportation.

MANY OF THE aliens, mainly from Mexico and South America, already were working illegally. But others who are ineligible for jobs will benefit since investigators who check businesses for illegal aliens are now busy reviewing and processing work permits.

Joseph Surek, INS district director in Los Angeles, estimated that 50,000 aliens in this area may seek visa stays under the Chicago order.

Grady's ruling stemmed from an act of Congress legalizing Cuban refugees. The Cubans were promptly admitted under Western Hemisphere immigration quotas to the exclusion of other nationalities, an action the Chicago plaintiffs claim was unfair.

If the March ruling stands, aliens who registered for a visa before Jan. 1, 1977, and who entered the country before March 11, will be eligible for permanent residence immediately.

Through ports of entry in California, "the hub of immigration," more than a million foreigners arrived last year, compared with 70,000 in New York, Surek said. Thirty per cent of all illegal aliens arrested in the U.S. were discovered in San Diego County.

ALIENS receiving work permits must show that they had at least applied for entry into the U.S. The required proof is a letter from the government dated before Jan. 1 that assigns an immigration priority. Aliens who simply sneaked across the border without even applying were ineligible.

Many, however, apparently applied for entry after they'd arrived, Seitz said.

"Some probably bought the letters, too," he said. "We frequently get fraudulent letters. When you're processing 900 a day, who knows?"

The Carter administration is expected to release its immigration policy at any time, according to Seitz. The new commissioner of the U.S. Immigration Service, Leonel J. Castillo, has indicated the government will assume a more relaxed attitude toward illegal aliens.

Castillo said here recently that the idea of amnesty for illegal aliens is "nothing new."

Amphibian threatened

Tussle over a toad

HOUSTON (NYTS) — A government wildlife consultant has declared a 35-square-mile area of Houston a "critical habitat" for the Houston toad, an endangered species, placing the two-inch amphibian in conflict with real estate developers.

Like the habitat of the snail darter, a three-inch fish that temporarily halted construction of the $116-million Tellico Dam project in eastern Tennessee earlier this year, the natural habitat of the Houston toad has been found critical to its survival by the Bureau of Fisheries and Wildlife.

If the Secretary of Interior agrees, federally subsidized construction on the land would be barred.

Privately financed building, however, does not come under the Endangered Species Act of 1973, and it appeared for a while that the toad's survival might be threatened by major land developments.

Local news accounts of the toad's plight brought pressure on private builders to protect the temporary ponds crucial to the amphibians' survival.

"We believe in housing for all Americans, toad and human," said Charles S. Leyendecker, president of the Greater Houston Builders Association. "We're ready to listen and discuss this with the experts."

The toads have been seen only five times in the last seven years, according to Dr. Robert A. Thomas, a lecturer in biology at Texas A&M University and author of the government report. The Houston toad spends most of the year underground, emerging only briefly in the spring to breed in temporary ponds.

Local environmentalists, fearful that too much publicity may hurt the toad's cause, say they plan no legal defense of its habitat against possible construction. But headlines have already made the Houston toad — its scientific name is Bufo houstonensis — a household name.

"Not every city has a toad named after it," said Bruce McCandless, president of the Houston Audubon Society. "We ought to have a little civic pride, after all."

Anti-Nazi protesters to march

SKOKIE, Ill. (AP) — Three anti-Nazi demonstrations were planned for Independence Day in this predominantly Jewish suburb of Chicago, following cancellation of a July 4 march by the National Socialist Workers Party.

One demonstration was scheduled by the Jewish Defense League and B'nai B'rith. The other two gatherings were being planned by the "Run the Nazis Out Coalition" and "The Workers Defense Coalition."

None of the groups have permits to march in the streets, but Mayor Albert Smith indicated there would be no arrests as long as the demonstrations are peaceful.

Nazi leader Frank Collin said the anti-Nazi demonstrations should "strengthen our case in court" because while his group has been blocked from demonstrating, the anti-Nazi groups "are permitted to spread their hatred."

Rabbi Meir Kahane, founder of the JDL, said the JDL demonstration will confine its activities to private property, unless Nazis appear in Skokie.

BUT A spokesman for the "Run the Nazis Out Coalition" said the demonstration will include a march from a city park to Skokie Village Hall, and the burning of an effigy of Nazi leader Frank Collin in front of the village hall.

"This is beautiful," Collin said, "especially the burning of the effigy. This will help us prove in court that Skokie is discriminating against us and illegally denying our constitutional rights and letting others march without permits."

New trends revising community growth

Social-structure changes weighed

By Jonathan Wolman

WASHINGTON (AP) — Far-reaching changes in the nation's social structure are forcing urban policymakers back to their drawing boards to devise new strategies for community growth and decline.

Lower birth rates, the increasing disintegration of marriages, and the growing number of elderly Americans are among a variety of population trends that "run counter to the premises" guiding current policies in housing, transportation, education and employment, according to Harvard professor Brian Berry.

At a National Academy of Sciences population symposium last week, he and other experts said the nation's future is shaping up something like this:

There will be more of us and, with a low birth rate and better health care, the elderly will comprise an

Number of elderly keeps on growing ever-increasing share of the population.

People, most of them white and well-off, will continue to flee the central cities. The remaining city-dwellers likely will be poorer, older and more minority-dominated.

Suburban growth will continue, but at a slower rate. Rural areas will lose farmland and woodland and gain population.

The rush to the Sun Belt, made possible by greater highway and airport access, as well as the reach of air conditioning, will continue with growth subsiding in the so-called northern Frost Belt.

More communities will face periods of decline — both social and economic.

Among other questions posed by the 50 officials and scientists were these:

—How do we get people to migrate from the Cleveland and the Philadelphia, where job opportunities are dwindling, to growth areas like Houston or Tulsa?

A panel of employment experts called for a job-

Rush to Sun Belt has its effect information clearinghouse for persons who'd like to move.

Neil Seldman of the Institute for Local Self-Reliance suggested that governments provide leverage capital to help develop labor-intensive community enterprises such as waste recycling or solar installation units.

—Can the government — or should it — take steps to bolster cities that have been losing population?

The Rand Corp.'s Ira Lowry listed four options: force a resettlement of the cities through zoning and land use restrictions; "stabilize" the half-empty cities through housing rehabilitation and credit policies; encourage dispersion of minorities to the suburbs through school desegregation and mortgage credits; clear land to rebuild the central cities into new communities.

—As marriages founder, what are the implications?

Barbara Cohn of New York City's housing administration said the growing ranks of single adult women, whether separated, divorced, widdowed or never-married, will be concentrated increasingly in the central cities.

"The city is an easier place to live in many respects, and of course the suburbs are more family-oriented," she said.

Added Ruiger's Sternlieb: "Single women are a substantial part of the new housing market."

—Why should we build new housing in areas where there are plenty of vacancies downtown?

Donna Shalala, chief planner at the Department of Housing and Urban Development, says HUD might pursue a rehabilitation strategy to make the vacant homes more attractive, and withhold money for new housing.

Broken marriages a big factor

More importantly, she said, HUD should tailor its urban aid programs to meet the needs of both growing cities and deteriorating ones. HUD now relies on sweeping programs such as rent subsidies and public housing that apply uniformly throughout the nation.

—How can the nation cut down on fuel use when more and more people are moving to suburban or rural areas where the average trip length is longer and where public transportation is rare?

"It's not a question of where people move, but how they get around once they get there," said Alan Pisarski, deputy director of planning at the U.S. Department of Transportation.

He said "the baby boom" of the 1950s is more significant for transportation planners than the current low birth rate, because the babies have grown up into car drivers. Other trends that suggest there will be more auto use include the move to smaller family sizes and the increasing number of women who are working.

Pisarski also noted that when families break up, both surviving households generally need a car where perhaps the couple shared one auto before.

Church group favors equal rights for gays

WASHINGTON (NYTS)

—Seventy-eight per cent of the 700 delegates polled at the biennial General Synod of the United Church of Christ here favored full and equal rights for homosexuals, and 80 per cent said they did not "feel uncomfortable" discussing homosexuality.

Fifty-six per cent agreed that the Christian church had been so weakened by changes in American society in recent years that it was no longer able to serve as the primary shaper of sexual values.

These were among the findings of the survey on sexuality conducted by Dr. Yoshio Fukuyama, head of the department of religious studies of Pennsylvania State University, before the opening of the five-day synod at the Washington Hilton Hotel.

Carter growth goals doubtful, says Brookings

By R. Gregory Nokes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Doubts about whether President Carter can achieve his economic goals were raised in new studies published Sunday by the Brookings Institution.

Some of Carter's top economic advisers, including Chairman Charles L. Schultze of the Council of Economic Advisers, came from Brookings, a Democratic-oriented think tank.

In one study, economist George L. Perry said Carter's goal of reducing unemployment to 5 per cent by 1981 would require over-all average economic growth of 5.7 per cent a year for five years, and above 6 per cent for part of this time.

"There is no precedent in postwar U.S. economic performance for the sustained high rates of expansion projected here," wrote Perry, a senior fellow at Brookings.

CARTER IS projecting economic growth of 5.1 per cent this year and 5.3 per cent in 1978, which apparently would be an insufficient pace to reduce unemployment to 5 per cent in five years, if Perry's argument is correct. The nation's jobless rate currently is 6.9 per cent.

While Perry said at a briefing he doesn't rule out the possibility that Carter can reach his goals, he said the economic policy decisions that this would require "have yet to be made."

"I can't say on the basis of the policy decisions now made that it is a reasonable goal," he added.

He said vigorous economic growth also would require substantial new investment and expansion of the nation's industry, which so far have been lagging since the recent recession.

Once the economy is again producing up to its potential, and 5 per cent unemployment is reached, Perry estimated the potential rate of growth after that would be about 3.9 per cent a year, compared with the 3.5 per cent estimates of the Carter administration.

ANOTHER ECONOMIST, Robert J. Gordon of Northwestern University, said in another study by Brookings that Carter's goals for a strong economic growth coupled with a reduced rate of inflation are inconsistent.

"The outlook for inflation is rather grim," he said, adding that as long as the administration promotes growth of the economy, which he indicated he favors, inflation probably will remain high.

He said inflation rates of 6 or 7 per cent are likely for the next several years. Inflation so far in 1977 is at about a 7 per cent rate, and Carter is projecting consumer price increases of 6.1 per cent next year. The inflation rate was 4.8 per cent last year.

Gordon said it might be possible to slowly bring the inflation rate down to about 2 per cent by the mid-1980s by restraining growth of the economy. But he said the economic cost of such a policy would be more than $1 trillion in potential output, which he said would be "exceedingly costly" to the nation.

EPA may join in suit against TVA pollution

ATLANTA (NYTS) — After years of almost futile legal battling on its own, the Environmental Protection Agency now is considering joining private citizens in a suit against the nation's No. 1 sulfur dioxide polluter, the Tennessee Valley Authority, another federal agency.

The private sector is represented by a coalition of environmental and health groups that filed suit June 22 against 10 of the TVA's 12 coal-fired electrical generating plants.

The suits were filed in federal courts in Knoxville, Memphis, Nashville and Chattanooga in Tennessee; Birmingham, Ala., and Paducah, Ky., the court jurisdictions nearest the generating plants. The suits seek to enjoin the authority from "emitting sulfur oxides in violation of applicable state emission limitations."

Dean Hill Rivkin, a University of Tennessee law professor who is legal counsel for the organizations that brought the suit, said the actions resulted from the EPA's lack of success in forcing the TVA to comply with the law after seven years of battling in and out of court.

Denies loan had bearing on action

Hatfield defends aid to bank

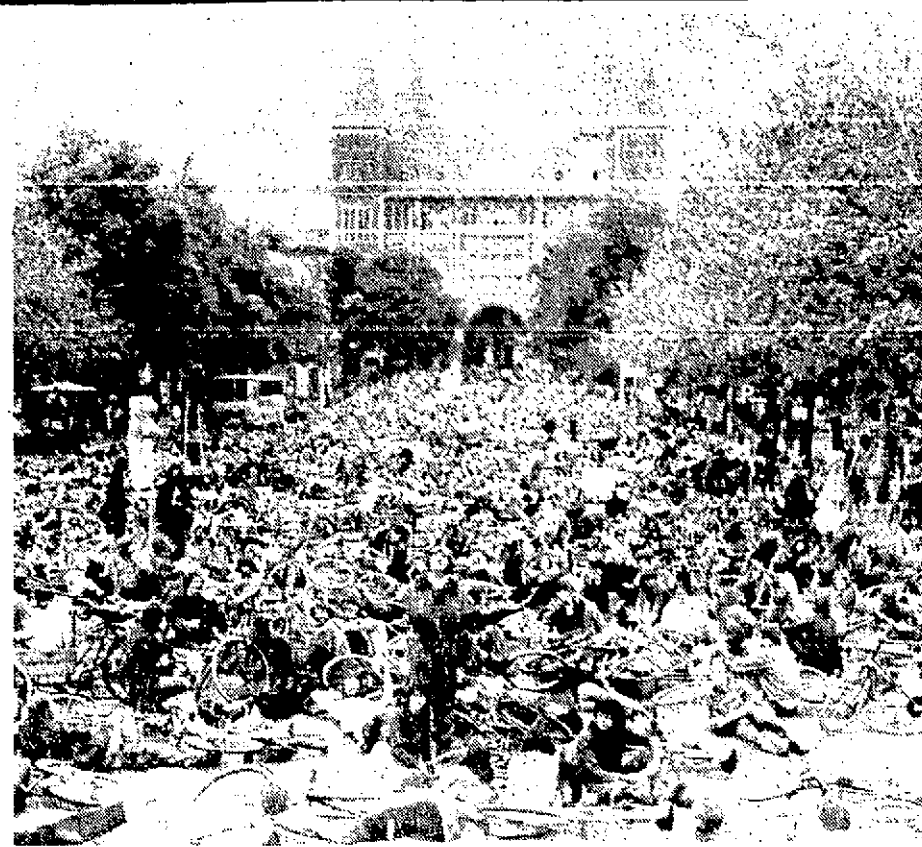

WASHINGTON (NYTS) — Sen. Mark Hatfield dismissed as "sewer journalism" Sunday a published report linking a $420,000 loan he received from a West Coast bank to buy a house here, with help his office gave to the bank shortly afterward in dealing with a federal agency.

The Oregon Republican said in a telephone interview that the matter had been handled "routinely" and "appropriately" by his staff and that "absolutely no impropriety" had been committed.

According to a report by Cox Newspapers, three weeks after agreeing to the loan to Hatfield, the U.S. National Bank of Oregon in Portland wrote to his administrative assistant, Gerald W. Frank, asking for help with "a regulatory problem." Frank is a director of the bank.

Vern Pearson, a vice president of the bank, told Frank that he wished for a delay by the acting comptroller of the currency on a ruling that would affect whether the bank could continue to offer microfilming services through a subsidiary

Carter urged to allow entry for 15,000 stranded Viets

By Bernard Gwertzman
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — The State Department, in a potentially controversial move, has asked the White House to approve the emergency admission of 15,000 Indochinese refugees stranded in Thailand and throughout Southeast Asia, some of them "boat people" still living on the vessels on which they escaped from Vietnam.

The White House was described by officials Sunday as "sympathetic" to the department's urgent request but has not yet responded to the proposal. Officials said the administration was aware of opposition on Capitol Hill from influential members of Congress to any further entry of Indochinese without specific legislation. Also there were budgetary considerations, officials said, and it was necessary to talk with key members of Congress.

Since the fall of Saigon in 1975, the United States has admitted 145,000 Indochinese under the emergency parole authority extended to the attorney general. But even though the law allows the attorney general to admit refugees without going to Congress, in practice the authority is not exercised without the concurrence of key Senate and House leaders.

A major critic of the program is Rep. Joshua Eilberg, chairman of the Judiciary subcommittee on immigration, who extracted a promise from the administration last year when consenting to the admission of 11,000 more refugees that no more would be admitted without specific legislation.

Under another part of the law, about 100 Indochinese have been admitted in the past six months as "conditional entry" immigrants. This will be expanded to 300 a month for the next three months.

At present, State Department officials estimate that there are more than 80,000 Indochinese refugees including some 2,000 "boat people" in Thailand, living in poor conditions in camps or on their boats. An additional 4,500 to 4,800 are believed to be boat cases scattered around the region, most of them in Malaysia.

These refugees are believed to be in desperate straits since, with the exception of some Western European countries and Australia, they are not being allowed to emigrate anywhere. To compound the problem, many refugees fleeing Vietnam by boat are not even being given temporary haven in Asian countries.

State Department officials said a series of articles on the refugees in The New York Times by Henry Karm had aroused concern in the human rights and Asian bureaus of the department. Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance was said to have taken a personal interest in doing something to ease the plight of the refugees.

But officials acknowledged that there was only a limited amount that could be done by this country, given the fact that in Congress there was no enthusiasm for allowing many more refugees in.

Vance, in a speech to the Asia Society in New York last Wednesday, drew attention to the situation of the refugees and urged all countries to do what they could, but omitted any mention of the State Department's proposal pending White House action.

In his speech to the Asia Society, Vance said:

"A new flow of Indochinese refugees commands the world's urgent humanitarian concern. Their numbers are growing at a rate of 1,500 a month. A few countries — including Thailand, France, Canada, Australia and most recently Israel — have done much to help these unfortunate people. Some nations, however, have turned their backs, leaving an increasing number of refugees to perish by drowning or disease."

He said, "I urge that shelter and aid be offered to these refugees, until more permanent resettlement can be arranged."

The United States has been working behind the scenes to encourage several Asian countries to accept many of the "boat people," but so far the efforts have been unsuccessful. Japan, Taiwan and other Asian states have resolutely refused to let the refugees have permanent, and now not even temporary, havens.

Officials estimate that it would probably cost about $1,000 per refugee, plus travel costs, and a relocation grant. There is some thought of giving the travel money on a long-term loan basis.

Of the 145,000 refugees admitted under the previous parole authorization, 129,000 came from Vietnam, 6,000 from Cambodia and 10,000 from Laos.

Health Questions and Answers

DON'T GET MAD AT MIRACLES

Q: Dr. Ward, one of my friends has a back problem almost identical to mine. I started chiropractic care and referred him for care. Ironically, he made spectacular response in a very short time while I am responding rather slowly — this makes me mad. I want a fast response like his. Why not?

A: I see you have the same problem that I frequently have. Namely, I often become quite impatient with conditions that are responding more slowly than I had anticipated. When this does happen, however, the first thing that should be done is to re-check all phases of the diagnostic conclusions and treatment procedures. Next, one should consider the type of condition it is and what caused it. Similar back conditions may have dissimilar causes. Different types of injuries often create different conditions that actually may appear to be the same as far as the layman is concerned. Regardless of what the cause, don't get mad at miracles especially if you don't seem to have one.

Q: What determines the rate of healing?

A: Many factors are involved: the amount of damage, the length of the condition; the abuse continued after the condition has been initiated, the influence of other health problems, age, type of treatment or corrective care, the amount of rest, the health status of the patient at the time the condition started and the irreversibility or irreparable damage involved. In chiropractic the severity of the spinal imbalance and the degree of nerve stress is of prime importance.

Q: I see what you mean about not getting mad at miracle but I still want one.

A: Well, I'll give you some suggestions that will enhance your response to treatment. On a back or nerve involved problem, see your chiropractor FIRST. Do exactly what he tells you to do. Get plenty of rest and don't do things that interfere with what the doctor is attempting to do for you. Stick with it even if the going seems rough at first. Don't stop care when the pain stops — wait until the doctor has adequately corrected the cause of your condition and your body has returned to its normal state — let the doctor tell you when it is safe to end treatment. And — if you do experience a miraculous recovery, don't tell or expect everyone you refer to a chiropractor to have miracles like yours — they might get mad at your miracle!

U.S. cleanup of Atlantic oil spill cost $5.2 million

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional auditors estimate that the Argo Merchant oil tanker spill off Nantucket last December cost $5.2 million, without counting damage to fish and sea life.

The General Accounting Office also estimated that an oil barge spill in Chesapeake Bay early last year cost $1.3 million, including $635,325 for 31,000 waterfowl killed.

The GAO gathered the figures for a House government operations subcommittee headed by Rep. Leo J. Ryan, D-Calif., which is investigating oil spills.

"This report reveals a hidden cost that is part of our nation's continuing dependence on foreign oil," Ryan said. "These spills which befoul our coasts and destroy our wildlife represent multimillion-dollar costs which the taxpayers must bear."

THE GAO said the estimated $5.2-million cost of the Argo Merchant spill includes $2.8 million for government clean-up costs and $2.4 million as the value of the 7.5 million gallons of oil spilled.

The spill occurred 27 miles southeast of Nantucket and the oil apparently washed out to sea.

But the GAO said any long-range damage "may be impossible to quantify. Virtually none of the 7.5 million gallons of oil spilled has been recovered."

"Recent surveys indicate the possibility that 27,000 square-miles of the Atlantic Ocean, including parts of the rich Georges Bank fishing grounds, may have been affected by the Argo Merchant spill," the report said.

It noted that a coalition of Cape Cod fishermen is suing the Argo Merchant's owner for $60 million in damages but that courts have not yet ruled on any damage claims.

The Coast Guard has filed claims against two international oil tanker groups for recovery of some of the clean-up costs.

The report said the barge oil spill in the Chesapeake Bay on Feb. 2, 1976, was far more costly in immediate environmental damage because of the 31,000 birds killed and the shorelines polluted.

The estimated $1.3-million cost included $608,540 in clean-up costs, $635,325 for the birds killed and $78,750 as the value of the 250,000 gallons of oil spilled.

The barge owner, Steuart Transportation, paid $39,916 but denies any further responsibility. The federal government is suing the company for $487,000 in clean-up costs and $1 million for the birds.

Killer-drug PCP lures Cal. teen-agers

By Everett R. Holles
New York Times Service

SAN DIEGO — Laboratories hidden away like "moonshiners" stills in back-country areas of Southern California are supplying drug users, most of them teen-agers, with a cheap but deadly substitute for heroin and other increasingly expensive narcotics.

Known as "pig outfits," the fly-by-night chemical plants are catering to a revived market for a potent hallucinogenic substance, PCP, or phencyclidine, the popularity of which declined several years ago when young people turned to clock to supply California users and to make deliveries to New York, Chicago and other centers of drug dealing.

Illicit labs cater for revived market

Federal, state and local authorities say the makeshift PCP laboratories are difficult to track down because of their mobility, but are nevertheless being destroyed at the rate of about one a week in the San Diego-Los Angeles-Riverside area.

High school students, able to buy one dose of PCP for $1 or a half-gram for $10 or $12, are the principal users of the drug. The substance has unpredictable effects that include drifting euphoria, prolonged coma broken by sudden outbursts of violence, schizophrenic stupor, paralysis of the limbs, brain damage and sometimes fatal convulsions.

The effects of a moderate-size dose may last for days or weeks or even be permanent.

Physicians say there is no direct antidote for PCP and that its toxicity, unlike that of other narcotics, can last for weeks.

Hospitals report that a steadily growing portion of all deaths from drug overdoses are caused by the crystalline, almost powdery substance.

An official of San Diego's drug abuse program estimates that nearly a third of the city's 126 overdose deaths in the past year could be attributed to the chemically concocted drug. Nonfatal PCP overdoses cases treated in hospital emergency rooms here and in Los Older addicts scorn PCP as deadly 'freak'

Angeles have been running still higher.

"It is a huge and growing problem, particularly frightening because so much of it is showing up in our high schools, where PCP frequently is in more common use than any other drug," said A.O. Flores of San Diego's narcotics force.

(Los Angeles County health officials said there were 10 PCP-related emergencies at the County-USC Medical Center in 1975, but that in the past 12 months about 200 cases have been admitted.)

(There is widespread use of the drug in Long Beach, narcotics officers say, but they report no greater problem with PCP than with any other drug.)

Not all those taking PCP are aware they are using what most older, hard-core addicts scorn as a deadly "freak."

James Black of the San Diego DEFY (Drug Education For Youth) program, whose hotline calls from PCP "trippers" have risen 500 per cent in recent months, says the makers and peddlers of PCP, because of the drug's bad reputation, often misrepresent it to be heroin, cocaine or LSD, or mix it with marijuana and call it wobble weed or superjoint.

Recently, he says, it has been used as a "booster" for heroin and cocaine that has been cut and recut to only 2 to 3 per cent purity to produce higher profits.

A youth emerging from a five-day PCP coma at San Diego's Sharp Memorial Hospital said he had thought he was buying bargain-priced cocaine. He remained in a highly psychotic state for a month and is still confined to a community mental hospital with frontal-lobe brain damage.

Although many youngsters may be unsuspecting users of PCP, which can be detected only by chemical analysis, others have acquired a bravado craze for it.

"Even though they're gambling with death, many high school kids consider PCP to be very macho,"

Many kids consider PCP to be very macho said Howard D. Young of the San Diego Department of Substance Abuse. "If you can handle it, then you're supposed to be a real man."

Drug control authorities agree that the revived heavy use of PCP, peddled for $3,000 or $5,000 a pound, can be attributed largely to the sharp rise in street prices of heroin, cocaine, LSD and hallucinogenic pills.

The profits of the "pig outfits" are enormous, according to John Van Diver, Western regional director of the federal Drug Enforcement Administration. He says some laboratories that formerly produced illicit LSD and amphetamines have switched to PCP because the ingredients are easier to process with a smaller investment.

Van Diver says a laboratory could realize a $100,000 profit from a $125 investment in PCP's readily available chemicals.

Any competent chemist or pharmacist can turn out 600 pounds of PCP every week or 10 days at a total overhead cost of $2,500, for sale on the street for upward of $5 million, he adds.

One of four laboratories recently raided in the hills northeast of Los Angeles had ready for shipment 100 pounds of the substance, with a street value estimated at $1 million.

Saccharin-ban delay could be fatal, FDA says

WASHINGTON (AP) — If Congress postpones a ban on saccharin for 18 months or two years, some people may die as a result, the head of the Food and Drug Administration warned Sunday.

If such a postponement is legislated, Commissioner Donald Kennedy added, strong warnings of the cancer-causing potential of the sugar substitute should be required.

Kennedy made his remarks on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation."

"The FDA proposed in March to ban the artificial sweetener as an additive in diet drinks and other processed foods, but to allow its continued sale in pure form as an over-the-counter drug. The agency has not yet set a date for the ban to take effect."

there was much chance Congress could be persuaded not to postpone the ban, Kennedy said, "I believe in all candor that I have to regard it as a losing battle at this point."

But Kennedy said that as far as is known presently, using saccharin is "very considerably less dangerous" than cigarette smoking.

Turning to the issue of Laetrile, which the FDA claims is ineffective in the treatment of cancer, Kennedy said a closer look should be taken at the question of whether it is harmless.

"A baby died in New York State as a result of the accidental ingestion of Laetrile last week," he said. "I think it presents possible problems, as that accidental death suggests."

DONALD KENNEDY
"A Losing Battle"

Poll records reversal of attitude Public favors easing of pot laws

By Louis Harris

For the first time since the Harris Survey began polling on the subject, a narrow 46-44 per cent plurality of the American people now favors decriminalizing the use of marijuana.

Only three years ago, the public opposed decriminalization by 49-36 per cent. At that time, they did not feel that "a small fine and no jail term for anyone having a small amount of marijuana" was adequate punishment.

But the turnaround should not mask the division that exists throughout the country on the issue:

Residents of the East Coast favor decriminalization by 55-39 per cent and those who live in the West by 54-34 per cent. However, Southerners are opposed by 53-35 per cent, as are Midwesterners, by a closer 47-43 per cent.

Big-city residents favor decriminalization by 53-39 per cent and suburban dwellers by 48-39 per cent. In contrast, people who live in rural areas are opposed by 56-35 per cent, while small-town residents are also opposed, by a close 47-43 per cent.

People under 30 favor decriminalization by 62-32 per cent. But people 50 and over oppose it by 53-35 per cent. Those between 30 and 49 divide 45-45 per cent.

The college-educated support decriminalization of marijuana by 60-33 per cent. But those whose education did not extend beyond the eighth grade oppose it by 61-22 per cent and those with a high school education by 48-42 per cent. Liberals support decriminalization by 65-30 per cent, and are joined by a narrow 46-43 per cent plurality of people who view themselves as middle-of-the-road. Conservatives oppose such a step by 52-40 per cent.

These latest findings on the issue of decriminalizing marijuana are paralleled by other significant changes in public attitude over the past years:

Since 1969, the number of adults in the country who are convinced that the use of marijuana is a "very serious" problem has declined sharply from 73 to 54 per cent. Clearly, public worries about marijuana have tapered off, although a majority still views its use as a highly serious matter.

In sharp contrast, the number of Americans who believe the problem of heavy drinking is "very serious" has risen from 53 to 76 per cent since 1969. Alcohol is now viewed by the American people as a much more serious problem than marijuana.

When the public is asked which is more dangerous, a clear 43-22 per cent plurality singles out alcoholic beverages over marijuana, while 29 per cent feel both are equally dangerous. Only three years ago, alcohol was viewed as more dangerous by 31-29 per cent.

Corn crop maturing very early

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — There's an old saying that a good corn crop should be "knee-high by the Fourth of July." Most plants in the Midwest this year are head-high and some are.

"In Illinois the corn is estimated at 52 inches tall," said Don Schlichte, executive vice president of the National Corn Growers Association, headquartered in Boone, Iowa.

"This compares with 32 inches there last year and an average the past three years of 28 inches."

THE CROP is more mature than normal in most places in the Corn Belt, said Schlichte. An unusually early spring allowed many farmers to plant crops early this year and wet March, even in drought areas, helped the corn to a fast start.

But Schlichte refused to speculate on final yield prospects because of uncertainty about adequate moisture. "As the corn plant increases in size it needs more moisture to develop and grow," he said.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture reported last week that farmers are expected to harvest 70.8 million acres of corn next fall. The forecast is down slightly from last year's harvest of 71.1 million acres. Many farmers planted more soybeans and less corn this year because of low corn prices and relatively high soybean prices.

"I JUST don't think anybody is going to question this year's growth rate as a record," said Dr. Garren Benson, an extension agronomist at Iowa State University in Ames. "Oh, there may be somebody that goes back to '02 or something, but I'm not that old. I don't ever remember anything approximating the early growth we've had this year."

But Benson said the moisture problem had some areas "really on the razor's edge. We have some corn that's actually shrinking in some of the real severe drought spots."

THERE ARE some dry spots in surrounding states, but as far as I can tell we're the driest of the dry," he said.

Paul Walle, Iowa's state climatologist, held out some hope.

"The weather pattern's changed a little bit. The indications are that we might be in more of a normal pattern — a couple of showers a week," he said.

Plea deals no bargain

At least not for the accused, says report

By Margaret Gentry

WASHINGTON (AP)—A criminal defendant may not get much of a bargain when he pleads guilty in a deal with prosecutors. University researchers said in a federally funded report issued Sunday that some defendants "may get nothing in return for their plea of guilty. Prosecutors may overcharge for the purpose of inducing a plea to one count of an indictment," the report said. In other words, a prosecutor may realize he only has enough evidence to prove a defendant is guilty of assault but he will persuade a grand jury to return an indictment for armed robbery along with assault. Then the prosecutor will offer to drop the armed robbery charge in exchange for a guilty plea to assault. Virtually all state and local prosecutors use plea bargaining to some extent though some refuse to admit it and many shroud the process in secrecy, the report said. The researchers said the bargaining should be conducted in the open and written records should be kept so the defendants and the public have a better understanding of the process. The 21-month study of plea bargaining in the U.S. was conducted by the Institute of Criminal Law and Procedure at the Georgetown University Law Center in Washington. It was financed with $303,000 from the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration which made the report public. As part of the study, researchers observed plea negotiations and interviewed participants in 26 localities, including Las Vegas, Chicago, Miami, New Orleans, Dallas, and Hartford, Conn. The report defined plea bargaining as "the defendant's agreement to plead guilty to a criminal charge with the reasonable expectation of receiving some consideration from the state." As it normally works, a defendant pleads guilty to a less serious charge in exchange for the state's agreement to drop the more serious charge and perhaps recommend leniency in sentencing. In one of the best-known examples, Spiro T. Agnew agreed to resign as vice president and plead no contest to a tax evasion charge in exchange for a Justice Department promise not to seek indictments on more serious corruption charges. The deal was struck after several weeks of negotiations. The report said the public often perceives plea bargaining as allowing defendants to escape the punishment they deserve, but this isn't always accurate. "The popular belief that defendants are getting a break or less than they deserve or a deal... is not always true," the report said. "In some cases, defendants may believe they are getting a bargain and they may be encouraged in that belief by their attorneys who may or may not know otherwise." The project director, Professor Herbert S. Miller, argued that plea negotiations should be made public. "I feel a lot of things go on in the back room that would not go on in the open. A judge may pressure someone to plead guilty in a back room, but in the open he won't, because the plea is supposed to be voluntary. "One reason the public is distrustful of plea bargaining is because the public does not know what is going on behind those closed doors. Bringing plea bargaining into the open would at least give the public some understanding of what is going on."

Computer crime

ment. The second section is particularly important, because computer crime is escalating from the theft of money to that of confidential corporate information, which then is sold to business competitors. A report on computer crime compiled by the General Accounting Office, the investigations arm of Congress, noted that in one case the manager of a "computer center processing personal information was able to steal some of this data and sell it to outside parties who were not authorized to use it." Under present law it was impossible to secure a conviction of the manager. Present federal law does not even define computerized data as tangible property. Indeed, the government lost another case because it was unable to prove that fraudulent checks issued by a computer could be defined as forgeries under the law. The difficulties of prosecuting computer crimes became apparent in Los Angeles last year when five persons were convicted of manipulating computer data, rather than stealing it. Technically, the five were found guilty of "making false statements in credit applications to a financial institution." Under the scheme, the five sold good credit ratings to financial deadbeats by improving the negative information about them that had been stored in a private data bank. More than two million Americans have access to computers and almost any one of them has the ability to penetrate electronic security systems that have been repeatedly documented to be lax. Most computers dealing with money or sensitive information are programmed so that a "password"—that is, a word, a special series of numbers or symbols—is required for entry. Once this password is known, the stored information is unlocked for looting or alteration. Because of the very nature of a computer the invader need not even go near it. All he needs is a keyboard terminal, much like an electric typewriter, and a telephone. The thief merely dials the number of the computer he wishes to invade and uses the keyboard terminal to punch out the purloined password. The thief's knowledge of computer language and programs then allows him to order the machine to do his bidding, such as transferring corporate funds electronically to his personal bank account. Then he may even order the computer to erase the magnetic tracks of the transaction. The security of computers, or the abysmal lack of it, is being given increasing attention. Peter Denning, a professor of computer sciences at Purdue University, says the average take from a computer-related crime is now $500,000 and rising. "As the stakes get higher, the sophistication of the attacks will also get higher," he says. New countermeasures include use of personal passwords such as fingerprints, palmprints, voiceprints and even lip prints that can turn on the machine. A counterplay to the unauthorized use of a program stored in a computer by a person allowed to use the machine for other purposes is the double password system now being used by Plessey Telecommunications, a British company. This refuses access to a specific program unless a second password is entered.

Mystery pair's 800-mile trail of death tracked

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP)—Two desperate fugitives, cutting an 800-mile trail of death through at least three states, were tracked for a fifth day Sunday by authorities who still don't know their names or what prompted their bloody flight. Striking in Louisiana last Tuesday, the pair switched getaway cars frequently as they moved into Arkansas and then into Oklahoma—where residents are just recovering from the shocking sex slayings of three Girl Scouts at a camp last month. Prison escapee Gene Leroy Hart, still a fugitive, has been charged in those killings, but the two cases are not thought to be related. FBI agent Tom George said authorities in all Southwestern states were on the lookout for the men, believed to be driving a maroon taxi stolen from their latest victim. "It's a wait-and-see operation now," an agent, who asked that his name not be used, said Sunday. "The leads we've had so far have been very unproductive...." A marshal and a park ranger are known dead, a second ranger is wounded, and two fishermen and the cab driver are missing. In addition, The Associated Press has learned that Louisiana authorities believe a third murder victim may be linked to the case. Investigators trying to identify the fugitives have checked all recent prison escapes in the three states, especially inmates doing time for murder. Attention has focused on two Louisiana men, reportedly friends who escaped from separate jails while awaiting trial for manslaughter. They had allegedly killed a cellmate while confined in the Acadia Parish Jail in Crowley, La. Authorities have checked the pair's fingerprints with those on the recovered getaway cars but have not released the findings. "We haven't made a decision either way," said George about the Louisiana pair.

was then that Exxon pulled out of the financing of the terminal." Exxon, which had agreed to pay 20 per cent of development costs for the $65-million terminal, withdrew its participation June 13, citing unacceptable permit and enforcement standards. Williams and Hanna said Sunday night they'd heard nothing of the kind. "I haven't heard anything," said Williams. "It's news to me. "I wouldn't be part of anything like that," he said, referring to the state aide's charge that port officials were working behind the scenes to scuttle Sohio. Hanna said he had not read the Sunday report in the Independent Press-Telegram in which the aide first disclosed the charges. "Everything we've been doing would indicate just the opposite," Hanna said. "We're trying to bring it in. "It would be good for the area, the port and the state. "To my knowledge," Hanna said, "I know of no one on the board opposed to the project." Bickering between the AQMD and the ARB could force an early decision on the Sohio project as each agency competes with the other for jurisdiction over the terminal. Projected air emissions from operation and oil storage at the proposed terminal have proved to be its Achilles heel. Sohio must receive air quality permits from three agencies—the AQMD, which covers Los Angeles, Orange, Riverside and San Bernardino counties, the ARB and the federal Environmental Protection Agency. The AQMD voted June 3—without a public hearing—to grant permits if Sohio could prove a "trade-off factor" of removing 1.2 pounds of pollutants from Los Angeles-area air for every pound it generated. Several AQMD board members questioned the decision to specify a trade-off factor without a public hearing. The dissident members then persuaded the League of Women Voters to petition the AQMD and demand a public hearing under state law. AQMD agreed and set a tentative date of July 22. Quinn announced last Thursday he would hold his own hearings July 16. "He can't do this," said Gladys Meade, appointed to the AQMD by Gov. Brown. "It will destroy all the work we've tried to do. We're the local agency, not Quinn."

Another AQMD member, Warren Harwood, said Sunday that despite their differences AQMD board members have taken a "straw vote" on how to deal with the Quinn hearings. "We'll vote July 8 on whether to hold our own hearings July 15," Harwood said. "We're eager to have our hearings before Quinn's. "Many board members remember how Quinn behaved during the Fontana hearings," he said, referring to pollution violations by Kaiser Steel. "He cruised in, made his political comments, and walked all over us. We're not happy with Quinn at all," he said. Harwood said the location for the AQMD hearings has not been set but that they might be held either in Los Angeles or West Covina. "I think it's proper to have a local air quality agency," Harwood

House leaders hit over Korea probe

By freshmen congressmen

By Richard Halloran
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — Two freshman congressmen from Pennsylvania have charged the leadership of the House of Representatives with impeding the investigation of alleged South Korean bribery of congressmen. Rep. Robert S. Walker, a Republican asserted, "Some of the leadership around here is less than enthusiastic about having a full exposure of everything with regard to the Korean scandal." Rep. Peter H. Kostmayer, a Democrat, agreed that "the leadership has not been as enthusiastic as it should be about getting to the source of the problem." Their remarks reflected the attitude of many first- and second-term congressmen about what they consider to be the slow and passive inquiry by the House Ethics Committee into allegations that members of Congress have taken money and other illegal gifts from South Korean agents. Both Walker and Kostmayer have been leaders in demanding a speedier and more aggressive investigation. This has become more of a generational than a partisan issue in Congress, where the majority of those under suspicion are Democrats. Walker and Kostmayer were interviewed Sunday on the Mutual Radio Network's program "Reporters' Roundup." In the criticism of their seniors, the two seemed undaunted by the tradition that newcomers should remain silent and follow the lead of the old-timers in their early days in Congress. Walker said, "One of the reasons why I feel there may be some foot-dragging is because we keep hearing leadership people mentioned as possible sources of the problem." He mentioned Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., the Speaker of the House, and Rep. John Brademas, D-Ind., the majority whip, both of whom have denied wrongdoing. Walker contended, "When you begin to get names like this, you begin to realize that perhaps the leadership doesn't want all of that kind of thing focused in the public eye." Former and present members of the House, all Democrats, who have come under investigation include former Reps. Otto E. Passman, La.; Richard T. Hanna, Calif.; Cornelius E. Gallagher, N.J.; Edwin W. Edwards of La., now Governor there; Joseph P. Addabbo, N.Y.; Robert L. Leggett, Calif. and John J. McFall, Calif. The split between the younger and older members of the House over the investigation is perhaps most noticeable in the ethics committee itself, where Rep. Bruce F. Caputo, R-N.Y., has clashed head-on with the committee chairman, Rep. John J. Flynt Jr., D-Ga. Caputo, 33, a former New York state legislator, has aggressively taken on the Korean scandal as an issue. In almost classic contrast, Flynt, 63, of courtly Southern manners, a congressman since 1954, is determined to take a cautious approach to the inquiry. They have confronted each other from the beginning, with Caputo urging and demanding speed, public hearings and full disclosure of possible conflicts of interest by members of the committee. Flynt has outmaneuvered and overruled Caputo in his effort to preserve what he considers to be the proper pace of the investigation and to protect the reputations of his colleagues. Rep. Millicent Fenwick, R-N.J., who sometimes appears to be mediating between Flynt and Caputo, was optimistic that the committee would complete a thorough investigation. Appearing on NBC's "Meet the Press," Mrs. Fenwick said: "I don't think anybody likes to sit in judgment. Ours is the most difficult, in a way, because we are sitting in judgment of our fellow congressmen. But I don't think anybody belongs on that committee unless they are prepared to do it and to follow any suggestion of wrongdoing whenever it may go. So I do feel confident."

said. "Now that we have one, we want the ARB to work with us, not try to upstage us. "As for Long Beach officials and these reports about how they may not want Sohio after all—if they're weakening, they ought to let the people know. Instead of slipping around in the background, they ought to play straight about this terminal." ARB hearings will be held at 10 a.m. on July 16 in Room 1122 of the state office building, 107 S. Broadway, Los Angeles. Harwood said the AQMD hearings will deal with Sohio's air quality permits and probably focus on the trade-off factor. Quinn said the ARB hearings will look not only at the air quality issue but also deal with the entire question of Alaskan oil and the impact of its shipment to California. Representatives of other state agencies will also be present, Quinn said. "We've talked to Sohio in our offices," Quinn said when asked to justify his own hearings. "Now its time to get it out on the public record. "Some things are still unresolved. Sohio says it's thinking about only two berths in the Port of Long Beach, but their application calls for three. "We also have to agree on that pipeline." Other state agencies, notably the State Energy Commission, warned that allowing Sohio to use an abandoned natural gas pipeline to ship its oil across the Southwest to Midland, Tex., may prevent California from receiving future natural gas supplies. Quinn said one possible solution already discussed with Sohio would be to allow Sohio to use the existing gas line if it agrees to build a duplicate pipeline at its own expense in time for the gas shipments expected in the early 1980s. "Don't even ask what that might end up costing," Quinn said. "The advantage would be that Sohio could have the other line now."

Juvenile crime prevention seen 'misdirected'

By Janice Perry
Staff Writer

Attempts to reduce juvenile crime have been misdirected and funds, in some cases, "largely wasted" by the Los Angeles County Juvenile Justice System, the County Grand Jury claimed in its final report to county supervisors.

The panel, whose term ended Thursday, released the report on Sunday.

Rather than try to rehabilitate older, delinquent youngsters in an attempt to stem the tide of juvenile crime, the Grand Jury's Juvenile Justice Committee instead recommended the county's boards of education initiate a preschool program in local schools to educate parents in the teaching and caring for of children.

ADDITIONALLY, the committee criticized juvenile treatment and diversion programs for inducing minor, first-time offenders into the system for "diversion" while releasing repeated offenders "at intake with no treatment," putting them on "informal probation with minimal treatment," or sending them home on probation.

"Thus," the report concluded, "money is spent where it is not needed and withheld where it might be of better use."

In regard to preschool parent-child educational programs, the jury said in its report:

"School systems usually spend the most money on high school students, much less on elementary school pupils, and little or none on preschoolers."

CONTENDING that "a developmental learning program must be presented to students at a very early age to be of significance in the child's future attitudes," the jury's report quoted Dr. Burton L. White, head of Harvard University's preschool project as saying that developing and learning capacities that will see a child through the rest of his life are pretty much set by age three.

The report said that experts claim the multimillion dollar Head Start program failed to show lasting results because it did not accept children until after their third birthday.

"If the present system is failing to accomplish the proper education of children," the grand jury concluded, "perhaps it is time to try a new approach."

The jury warned that "if a new system were to start today, it would take a minimum of five and possibly close to 20 years to achieve any significant results."

THE REPORT advocated the closing of juvenile detention facilities and replacing them with more recreational centers, saying, "The decrease in institutional population would result in a great reduction in expenditures of taxpayers' monies."

"It would prove to be less expensive for the taxpayer to support the early education concept," the report claimed.

The committee also recommended that all juvenile diversion and treatment programs in the county be examined by independent evaluators to determine whether they are effective in reducing juvenile crime.

"If not, they (the programs) should be terminated immediately," the report recommended, adding that 10 per cent of the cost of all projects should be reserved for evaluation expenses.

COMMITTEE members were equally concerned that "useless programs are continued along with the good. Most treatment and diversion programs within the county are not studied by an independent group, are poorly studied, or are not evaluated at all."

Although the report did not use specific dollar figures, it said "large sums of money being spent for . . . institutional treatment and community diversion programs are largely wasted."

The group found an inverse correlation between money spent on current crime prevention programs and incidence of juvenile crime. In 1976, $26 million was given to eight selected cities, "in the hope that various programs for crime reduction could be demonstrated to be effective."

"The results indicated that crime actually increased in all eight cities," the committee said.

Diversion programs are particularly misdirected, the report claimed.

"There is already some evidence that the majority of juveniles diverted are primarily the young minor offenders with little or no record . . . Referral and treatment for them represented increased intervention rather than diversion from the formal system," the report said.

Gold Star Mothers patriots every day

By Brad Altman
Staff Writer

Stars and stripes fly from apartment balconies every day — not just on the Fourth of July — at American Gold Star Manor in West Long Beach.

"We take our patriotism seriously," said Maymie Gibson, 77, a five-year resident who formerly lived in Des Moines, Iowa. Her two sons, both servicemen, were killed in World War II.

She is one of 343 Gold Star Mothers living in the $6.2-million, 23-acre apartment complex at Spring Street and Wardlow Road. The compound is fenced, and guards stand round-the-clock sentry duty at the entrance gate.

The average age of the Gold Star Mothers — each of whom lost a son or daughter in one of the World Wars, Korea or Vietnam — is 78.

THE YOUNGEST resident is 54, while the oldest, 101-year-old Ida Mae Austin, is the only mother of a World War I casualty.

"For the most part, they're very happy people," said executive secretary Marge Cashdollar. "They have 15 clubs to join. There's bingo on Friday nights and twice-monthly movies and potlucks."

"I don't have a minute to be lonesome," Mrs. Gibson said. "You can't go on grieving. It's just something you have to live with."

The Long Beach chapter of the Gold Star Mothers was established in 1955, and for two decades, the women lived in temporary World War II bungalows built for the Navy.

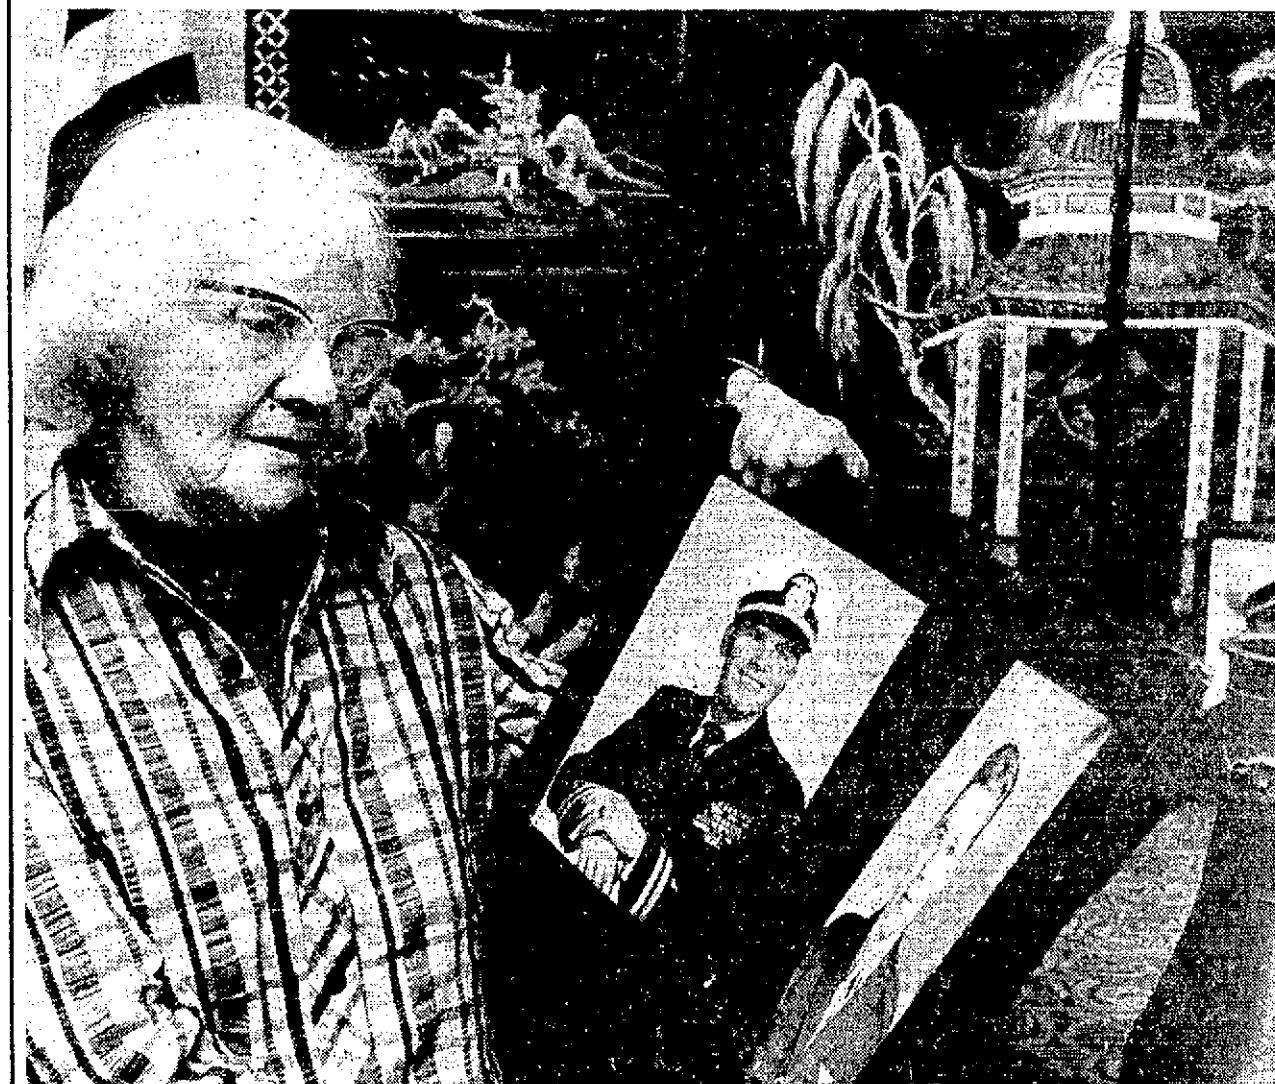

In June 1975, the mothers moved into 10 new apartment buildings financed by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

They pay an average of $113 a month for rent, which includes all utilities and repairs.

"It's a wonderful place," said Gladys Mullaney, 74, a native of Chicago. Her son, John Ewing, was aboard a Navy submarine when it disappeared off the coast of Australia in World War II.

She and her husband of 32 years, Jim, have lived in the manor for 15 years. They are one of 52 couples there.

HUSBANDS ARE permitted to share the apartments, and if the wife dies, the husband may retain the residence. The majority of the women, however, are widows.

AMERICAN FLAGS fly every day, top, at the American Gold Star Manor in West Long Beach, where patriotism is the rule, rather than exception, according to Maymie Gibson, 77. Mrs. Gibson, one of 343 Gold Star Mothers living in the complex, pauses, above, to reflect on Independence Day with portraits of her two sons, both of whom were killed during World War II.

City officials hope Brown will clarify new freeway issue

By Dorothy Korber
Staff Writer

Plans for the stalled Century Freeway are crawling ahead with all the speed of a rush-hour traffic snarl, but local officials hope that a July 18 visit from Gov. Brown will help untangle, or at least clarify, the situation.

Assemblyman Frank Vicencia, D-Bellflower, arranged for Brown's visit in an effort to encourage communication between local leaders and officials in Sacramento.

The governor's visit, however, is still tentative, and the time and place have not been set for the meeting.

IN ADDITION, Vicencia said, communication is about all that can be accomplished at the meeting, since the future of the freeway rests not with state or local officials but with the federal court system.

Plans for the embryonic Century Freeway (I-105) were frozen in 1972 by a court injunction. The injunction is based on a suit filed by conservation groups who contend that the freeway will damage the environment.

The state has already purchased the right-of-way, however, and today — five years later — hundreds of vacated "freeway" homes still vex officials in Paramount, Lynwood, Downey and Norwalk.

Plans call for the freeway to run from the San Gabriel River Freeway to the Los Angeles Airport.

RESIDENTS and police agree that the vacant houses spawn crime and other social problems. The houses cannot be moved or even kept up without specific approval from the federal court, Vicencia said.

"I'm totally frustrated," the assemblyman commented in an interview last week. "We can't do anything. We can't even get rid of the vacant houses unless the injunction is lifted. The judge has to cooperate every step of the way."

Vicencia said the injunction will be lifted when an environmental impact report on the Century Freeway is approved. And that long process, involving state and federal agencies, probably will not be completed until June 1978, he estimated.

"THEN, the court will receive the approved environmental impact report and hopefully will lift the injunction," Vicencia explained.

The California Department of Transportation (CalTrans) is preparing the report, which should be finished sometime this month, he added.

But while the wheels of justice move slowly forward, irate citizens are demanding a quick solution to the problem of the vacant houses.

Last month, a pair of Paramount PTA mothers organized a campaign which dispatched 500 postcards urging Gov. Brown to resolve the situation.

"People are so mad and upset, but our hands are completely tied," Vicencia commented. "I hope that bringing the governor down here will ease their minds."

VICENCIA said that he and other legislators who represent the freeway area have introduced a bill aimed at removing the freeway houses. The future of that legislation is still unsettled, he said.

Vicencia added that the design of the freeway is certain to cause additional delays and pose further problems.

Frances Cox, an organizer of the Paramount postcard campaign, said that most residents are more concerned about the vacant houses than about the ultimate design of the freeway.

"I don't care what happens to the freeway," she concluded, "but those empty houses have to go."

Proposal for full-time L.B. mayor advances

A proposal calling for a full-time mayor for Long Beach will be presented to the City Council Tuesday by the Mayor's Task Force on New Directions.

The blue-ribbon citizens committee also will recommend that the mayor be elected at large, and that he be paid a salary of $20,000 a year.

The mayor is now one of nine part-time council members and is elected by the council.

Although the report takes up the question of a full-time council, it stops short of recommending a change in the panel's part-time status.

Instead, it calls for continued study of "the question of a full-time versus part-time City Council." It does, however, recommend a pay increase from $6,614 to $7,000 for the council members.

In the event the mayor remains a part-time elected official, it adds, his salary should be raised from $6,614 to $9,000 — partly to reflect the additional duties of his office.

An earlier draft of the report called for the creation of a nine-member citizens' panel to review the mayor's and the council's salaries on a biannual basis. However, the recommendation has been dropped from the final version.

The report, the fourth in a series of task force studies on city government, is expected to be referred to a council committee for review.

LETTER FROM MAC

MALCOLM EPLEY

FORT BIDWELL—A bright diversion broke the mid-summer routine for me last weekend.

I was invited — and accepted — to be the spieler on a tour of the county by some 44 wives of Rotarians, in the area with their husbands who were holding a district conference at Alturas, our county seat.

While the Rotarians were in business session, their women went with me and had a better time. We took them around in a school bus. It held only 40, so Jane came along behind in our car with the overflow.

We crossed the Warners through Cedar Pass, visited the old cattle town of Cedarville and the county fairgrounds there, came up Surprise Valley to Fort Bidwell, crossed back over the Warners by Fandango Pass, lunched on beautiful ranger station grounds and returned to Alturas on U.S. 395.

I was invited to be tour guide because, some one told me, I have a gift of gab. I'm immodest enough to say that I think I did a good job. I told them many of the stories I have told you in this column, some of them a little humorous, and I detected warm response.

FOR INSTANCE, they loved my story about the wedding of a Fort Bidwell couple held a couple of years ago in a woodland glen in Cedar Canyon.

There were cattle in the canyon which were cleared out for the ceremony and reception. It was the first and only time in my life when, at a wedding reception and sipping champagne, I stepped in a cow-plop. A nice wet one, too.

Another story that always gets a laugh is the one old-timers used to tell to illustrate the slow travel on the passenger trains on the narrow-gauge railroad that ran between Alturas and Lakeview, Ore.

It seems a lady aboard reported to the conductor that she was having labor pains. He reluctantly called the brakeman and they delivered the babe in good style. But the conductor was mad.

"Lady," he said, "You shouldn't have gotten on this train when you were pregnant."

"When I got on," she replied, "I wasn't."

IT WAS obvious the Rotary wives were charmed by our little hamlet of Fort Bidwell. As some said, and as I have told you, it is like a step back a generation or two.

For instance, for many weeks now, several horses, said to belong to reservation Indians, have been running loose up and down the streets. One local woman told me it was a "disgrace."

But the Rotary gals thought it was great. "Where else?" they asked.

They jammed the General Store and Elsie Kober's dry-goods emporium. They didn't buy much but it was exciting. There were more people in those two places at one time than we had ever seen.

THE GALS rested for awhile in the shade of the lawn of the Farr B. home of Ben Cambron, an Alturas Rotarian who had general charge of the tour and recruited me for the loudspeaker chore.

There I had a chance to give them the Fort Bidwell history highlights, including the wagon trains on the old Oregon trail; the 1885-92 life of the old fort; the Indian hostilities; the 1905-15 gold rush in the nearby mountains; and the recent era as a tiny cattle town where the visit of 44 Rotary wives is the biggest news since Harold Ascherman's dog woke up and moved to the shade on the east side of Main St. after spending virtually an entire summer asleep on the west side.

Wait for the facts

The request of the newly organized Homeowners Downtown Associates that public hearings be held on the proposed downtown marina is a valid one — and the City Council already has said it will hold such hearings.

The primary purpose of a public hearing is to bring out the facts, pro and con, on the subject under consideration. Unfortunately, the petition submitted to the City Council by Homeowners Downtown Associates sounds as if those signing it already have made up their minds.

And it is particularly unfortunate that reasons for the opposition, as voiced by the organization's president, Margot Bergman, do not seem to be supported by the evidence to date.

MS. BERGMAN told the council, and said Friday in a "Letter to the editor," the existing Long Beach Marina is losing money. She based her statements on information received from the mayor's office — but this information is a little misleading.

Figures on the report for fiscal 1975-76 and 1976-77 were not the actual income and expenses of Long Beach Marina, but an estimate of what they would have been under a new accounting system being put into effect this fiscal year.

Applying the new accounting to the 1975-76 and 1976-77 operations of the marina deleted some major sources of income which are directly related to it.

IT DID NOT include property and possessory interest taxes on boats in the marina, which city budget experts estimated at $93,500 in 1975-76 and at $103,660 in 1976-77. Neither did it include fees from the launching ramp, Chart House restaurant or Seaport Village, all tideland income, which totaled an estimated $350,000 in 1975-76.

Even under the new-system estimates, the marina had a net operating surplus of $60,925 in 1975-76 and $86,841 in 1976-77. Ms. Bergman's deficits of $170,000 and $144,000, respectively, result from deduction of capital projects and establishment of a capital reserve, which totaled $230,813 each year.

Long Beach Marina income is limited by slip-rental fees which are below comparable marinas in the area. The City Council, however, has directed that rates be increased "over a reasonable period" to match other marinas.

The new accounting system — still excluding taxes from the boats and revenue from the launching ramp and leases — will be in effect this year, and the budget experts estimate the net operating surplus will be $394,250 and, after deduction for capital projects, the total surplus will be $116,045.

A private consulting firm is conducting a feasibility study for the proposed downtown marina, both economic and environmental. If the City Council votes to proceed with the project, based on this study, it will do so on two already adopted policies:

- The cost of the downtown marina will not be funded in any form by tideland revenue. It will be financed by special low-interest loans from the State Department of Navigation and Ocean Development and by revenue bonds.
- Operation of the downtown marina will be financed solely out of its own revenues from slip rentals and leases.

As we have said before, we believe the proposed marina can be a positive factor toward revitalizing downtown Long Beach. It would bring into the area people and business — both of which are needed.

Proposed landscaped areas, pedestrian and bicycle paths, and restaurants will make the marina attractive to non-boaters as well as to those renting slips.

If the feasibility report found development of the downtown marina would create serious problems, we would not want to see it built. However, the success of the Long Beach Marina — both from an economic and environmental standpoint — indicates the downtown marina will be a beneficial project.

Fourth of July, 1977

Independence Day 1976 is a tough act to follow, as they say in show business.

After the Freedom Train, the historical pageants, the dedication of structures such as Long Beach's Bicentennial carillon and clock tower, the visit of the sailing ships, the music and the fireworks — after all that, what do you do for an encore?

Philadelphia, as befitting a city whose traditions are deeply rooted in the American Revolution, is winding up Freedom Week today with speeches, parades, music, pageantry and readings from the Declaration of Independence.

Old Salem, N.C., will reenact the nation's first recorded Fourth of July celebration. Other cities will celebrate with traditional fireworks displays and programs.

Some Americans, looking back on the Bicentennial year, may ask themselves whether the celebration really accomplished anything. We think England's Manchester Guardian might have given such Americans an answer with its comments earlier this month on Queen Elizabeth's Silver Jubilee observance.

The jubilee, the newspaper editorialized, "has, briefly, stirred some hearts and some friendships, and thus done some good... The jubilee is an island, a speck on the map. We can build little on it. But we have at least enjoyed the brief exploration."

Coal conversion:

Frighteningly costly prospect

By Bob Rankin
Congressional Quarterly

WASHINGTON — Electricity bills, already so high that consumers mount furious protests nationwide, would skyrocket even higher in some regions if President Carter's proposal to force utilities to burn coal instead of oil and gas took effect.

"We feel that the price of electricity will increase at least three to five times" under the Carter coal conversion program, said George W. Oprea Jr., executive vice president of Houston Light and Power Co.

"We'd just about triple the bill to our customers," said Donald C. Lutken, president of Mississippi Power & Light Co.

The President wants to save oil and natural gas by making utilities, and major industries, burn coal instead. But converting a gas- or oil-fired plant to coal is not easy, and can be frighteningly expensive.

(Second of two articles)

Major Reconstruction

According to the Edison Electric Institute, the nation's total 1976 electric generating capacity included 152,000 megawatts fired by oil and gas boilers; of that amount, "only 22,000 megawatts are convertible to coal without major reconstruction."

In some if not most cases, "major reconstruction" means rebuilding the entire power plant. Coal-fired boilers are usually about twice as large as gas- or oil-fired boilers; they simply cannot fit into many plants' current space.

Coal presents other space problems. Its bulk requires massive storage areas near the plant where it is to be burned. Because it must be hauled by rail or barge in most cases, a spur rail line or barge loading facility must be near. Special equipment to handle the coal, such as conveyor belts, must be present as well. All those things require space, and cost money.

Similar problems beset industry. "Conversion is the wrong word," maintained Cornell C. Maier, president of Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. in congressional testimony. "None of our plants are convertible to coal. They must be rebuilt and the existing plants scrapped. . . ." Maier said his company would need at least seven years to complete conversion, and probably longer.

The Celanese Corp. will spend more than $70-million to convert one chemical plant at Pampa, Miss., to coal, according to testimony from Daniel F. Twomey, a company executive. And after all that expense, "we will not have increased our production capacity," he observed.

Transport Problems

Most of the burden for hauling the increased coal load will fall on the railroads, which currently move about two-thirds of domestic coal production.

According to testimony from the Association of American Railroads and from Transportation Secretary Brock Adams, there should be enough railroad cars and locomotives available to do the job.

But the nation's rail roadbeds are crumbling in some places. Main lines in the Northeast and Midwest are in serious disrepair, as are secondary lines throughout the country. The industry says it can make repairs as required in plenty of time to meet the coming increased coal load.

Adams was less optimistic, however: "To the extent that constraints on the shipment of coal by rail do emerge," he said, "they are likely to involve the ability of financially marginal railroads to secure the financing required."

... The bulk of investments in question would be for improved signaling systems, rolling stock and lengthened sidings, or intermittent double tracking," Adams testified. "We are not likely to be faced with the need to construct whole new rail lines."

Most of the remaining coal would be shipped by barge, hauled by truck, piped as "slurry" or converted to power at minemouth generation plants. A Transportation Department task force is due to report to President Carter by the end of the year on problems his push for coal might create.

Environmental Problems

The administration insists that the United States can burn almost twice as much coal in 1985 as it did last year without sacrificing environmental standards; there are many disbelievers.

Douglas M. Costle, chief of the Environmental Protection Agency, explained the administration reasoning in congressional testimony. Burning more coal would increase emissions, he conceded. But the administration also calls for conservation measures that would reduce emissions, especially those now caused by oil and gas use.

The administration would insist that all major facilities install pollution control devices to minimize coal smoke hazards. Those factors together mean that total emissions under the President's plan would be no greater in 1985 than without the plan, Costle said.

The strongest environmental criticism of the Carter coal conversion program came in House testimony from Richard E. Ayres, a lawyer with the Natural Resources Defense Council.

Carter's coal program would result in "increased death and disease from additional pollution," he said flatly.

Ayres cited the example of increased pollution caused by converting a small industrial boiler of 50 million BTU (British thermal unit) capacity from gas to coal.

Burning coal with a 1 per cent sulfur content — a relatively low level for most American coal — would produce 1.8 pounds of sulfur oxide per million BTU, Ayres said.

"This is over 3,000 times greater than the gas-fired emission rate," Ayres said. "Even if the 1 per cent coal were scrubbed by 90 per cent, the coal emission rate would be 300 times greater than the gas emission rate."

'Greenhouse Effect'

There are other nasty environmental effects forecast by opponents of increased coal burning, but none is more potentially serious than the phenomenon commonly described as "the greenhouse effect."

Some scientists say that heavy coal burning could produce so much carbon dioxide that the earth's cloud cover would grow excessively dense, trapping heat inside the atmosphere, which slowly would raise the temperature of the whole planet, as if inside a greenhouse.

Wallace S. Broecker of Columbia University said that within 50 years the earth's temperature could rise an average of four degrees, eventually melting the polar ice caps and perhaps upsetting the world's ecosystem.

President Carter has requested nearly $3-million to study the long-term effects on the atmosphere of carbon dioxide build-up from burning coal and other hydrocarbons.

Letters to the editor

Educational frills

James L. Kilpatrick in his column of June 27 presents a valid criticism of the results of "innovative" education. He fails to consider the true reasons for the failure of schools to educate. School financing is dependent on pupil daily attendance. Schools must be made "pleasant" places in order to induce students to attend. This means there must be a minimum of work and a maximum of fun.

In order to supplement diminishing financial support from local sources, reluctantly provided by disenchanted school patrons, school districts desperately vie for federal and state funds. Invariably, these are tied to experimental programs. There are large numbers of former teachers who have fled the classroom and are only too willing to concoct programs and curricular changes that have very little to do with education.

If many students lack the basic skills (and many do), it is largely because vast sums are poured into such programs as "career education" while teachers in traditional subject areas face increasingly large classes of students, many of whom don't want to be there at all.

Teachers who remain in the classroom have very little to say about this tragic attenuation of the curriculum. When they are finally heeded, the downward trend of public education may be halted, and once again young people will learn to read, write and spell and compute effectively.

Hatch vs. unions

The I, P-T editorial, "Politics vs. Hatch" on June 24, predictably brought cries of outrage from those with a vested interest in politicizing the U.S. Civil Service. Their displeasure is understandable, for the repeal of the Hatch Act would put at their disposal reservoirs of political and economic power that were undreamed of even by the authors of the act itself.

The I, P-T editorial, in an apparent attempt to parry accusations of ideological bias, pointed out that Common Cause, for example, opposes relaxing the protective restrictions of the Hatch Act. It might have also pointed out that even The New Republic (no gaggle of conservatives, those fellows) has expressed similar views editorially.

The most powerful force of argument, however, are the plain facts themselves. Fact one is that public employees, particularly those who have become unionized, including federal employees, have come to accept the divinity of their elite economic status and believe that the public owes them this, and even more.

Fact two is that the public, particularly the nonunion taxpayer, does not owe a public employee one dime more of wages or pension than it takes to secure qualified applicants from which to fill a vacancy.

Fact three is that there is not one dime of wages, benefits or retirement money accrued to public employees by their unions that does not reduce the standard of living of those American taxpayers who do not belong to labor unions. (The I, P-T estimates this latter group to be about 78 per cent of the American working force.)

No one is really afraid of 2.8 million federal workers racing out to "...become involved in corrupt political activities," as writes trade-union president Andy Abbott. What most of us fear is that, with the Hatch Act repealed, this host will engage in the perfectly legal political pursuit of acting like unionized people should — that is, attempting to secure more and more money, at someone else's expense.

Considering the fact there cannot possibly be an artificial gain in the wages and pensions of federal workers without a corresponding diminution in the well-being of nonunion taxpayers, is it really too much to ask that the Senate ignore the deceptive cries of labor leaders for "first-class citizenship for federal workers," and be persuaded instead by their sacred duty to ensure first-class citizenship, including economic citizenship, for all American workers.

There are not too many newspapers around which will take a stand for nonunion workers. Long Beach is fortunate to have a newspaper which does just that.

An expensive nap

I had the opportunity to attend the first full-day session of budget deliberations of the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors on June 24.

Supervisor Hayes had requested that members of his Tax Advisory Committee attend this meeting, and as a member of the Long Beach Tax Advisory Group, I attended this most enlightening session.

I recommend that all taxpayers visit these meetings. You will be as amazed as we were.

During the morning session, Supervisor Edelman had a proposal on the floor which would increase the relief allowance to each of the county's 20,000 recipients by about $8 per month.

Supervisor Hayes then proposed an amendment which would only cut 10 cents a day from this proposed raise, taking into consideration the loss of food stamp allowance on Edelman's plan, and would save $1.5 million.

Supervisor Hayes' plan was overruled by Supervisors Edelman, Kenneth Hahn and Bater Ward. Thus, to give the 20,000 relief recipients only 10 cents a day costs the taxpayers $1.5 million this year!

Supervisor Ward asked to have the plan explained to him three times when the vote was being taken, as he said, "I have been inattentive." Pretty expensive nap there, Baxter Ward.

Ignoring good news

Sunday, June 26, in the Los Angeles Coliseum over 50,000 Catholics from 29 countries joined to show their dedication to their Christian vocation. The Eucharistic celebration during which 600 priests gave Holy Communion to the faithful was truly magnificent. Prior to the mass, 3,000 young people ran two miles through Los Angeles to the Coliseum in testimony to the Epistle of St. Paul, and the Olympic flame was lit. Nor were the little ones forgotten; they received a balloon saying, "Hi God," to which they attached a message of love and sent it aloft. It was altogether a beautiful, reverent, joyous and memorable day.

Your paper chose to totally ignore this event. It is inconceivable to me that you should be so remiss in your duty to report the news, and it is an affront to our Catholic people.

Your Monday edition gave considerable coverage to deviates across this country. If you choose to promote the destructive forces in society and to ignore the good and the beautiful, does this not amount to propaganda?

As for not being responsible for the bad news, only reporting it, you had an opportunity to report the good news, and you cavalierly dismissed it.

And points out some fallacies

An economist looks at energy

The following is excerpted from an address to an energy conference in Portland, Ore., by an economist for the Georgia-Pacific Corp.—The Editor.

By Robert H. Keese

Dr. Herman Kahn, Director of the Hudson Institute, once said that the authors of the Constitution had several things in common including the fact that they had all read Plutarch's Lives, The Bible and Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations. The latter, of course, is often referred to as the handbook of capitalism. Indeed it is.

Many people remember Smith as an economist who was trying to break the stranglehold of mercantilism, a system which resulted in close collusion between government and business and characterized by monopoly, constraints on market entry and protectionism. Certainly he was an economist, but what is often overlooked is that he was primarily a moralist who was attempting to determine what was right and wrong with society. As a moralist, he sought to design a system in which the power of government to disperse favors and the ability of business to curry them was minimized. He believed that such a system would automatically place in the hands of the consumer the economic, political and social freedoms that were so actively desired. Private property and private enterprise were key factors in assuring that the consumer was king and the prime determinant of production.

UNDER this new system, the role of government would be to insure that the health and safety of the public were not unnecessarily compromised and that markets were kept competitive. The role of business would be to provide the goods and services desired or needed by the consumer. In the process, resources would reach their optimal combination of usage. Such action would uplift mankind to new heights of economic, social and political freedom.

Obviously, the ideal was never reached and never will be. But the liberal concepts which Smith formulated so carefully and the relative abundance created by the application of those concepts in this nation should be kept in mind as we strive for solutions to the energy problem. Considering the very large role some suggest the government should play, it is both timely and important to explore some of the fallacies and misconceptions inherent in the arguments put forth to the public.

1. "The more we conserve, the better off we will be." This concept is generally accepted without challenge because everyone seems to believe in conservation. What bothers economists, however, is that few efforts have been taken to properly define the term. Prior to a campaign to achieve a long term goal, we must agree on a definition. "Improving the efficiency of energy use," one definition that is often used, will not suffice because it begs for a definition of "efficiency." "Eliminating waste" creates a similar problem.

LEFT UNRESOLVED, we will create social conflict as we each develop our own hazy definitions. Such definitions will lead to subjective valuations regarding other citizens' consumption patterns. When gasoline rationing was discussed during the recent embargo, did not most of us perceive that it was the "guy down the street" that would suffer; that we did not have enough because someone else used too much; that our needs were more important; and that through rationing we would get what we needed while avoiding lines?

To resolve this definitional problem, we should recall that society does not enhance its economic wellbeing by arbitrarily reducing consumption of a resource. Economic improvement is accomplished through efforts to optimize the long run usage of all resources: natural, physical, capital and innovative, while allowing the maximum individual freedom of choice. Conservation, then, can be defined as the usage of resources so as to maximize their present worth. Such usage is a marketplace determination which results in the greatest long run availability of goods and services to satisfy human needs.

2. "We are running out of resources." This fallacy is tied to the alleged finiteness of non-renewable resources. From this concern comes the notion that renewable resource usage and development is therefore preferable. Actually, except for the fossil fuels which have been burned and the metals which have been launched into outer space, almost every non-renewable resource that has ever been here is still here. Granted, the form may have been altered and the resources redistributed—but they are still here. It may not be currently economic to retrieve them but that does not mean that we cannot find a way to do so if economic necessity dictates such action.

3. "IF WE CONTINUE our use at this rate, in the year 2000 we will run out." The key to this fallacy is the assumption that usage patterns will continue on a predetermined or historical trend line. No resource usage has ever followed such a long term pattern. As the resource becomes more scarce and the price increases, a combination of substitutions for and reduced usage of the original resource occurs. The transition usually takes place long before physical shortages appear. In other words, a new combination of capital, natural and physical resources and innovation evolves.

Related to this point is the fallacy that the replacement source will always cost more than the existing one. Historically, however, the opposite has been generally true. Plastic cost less than glass. Oil and natural gas cost less than coal when substitution occurred in the late 1940's. Coal cost less than wood when the substitution occurred in the 19th century. Synthetic fibers cost less than natural fibers. And in every case the ultimate consumer was not only the beneficiary but the determiner of production through purchasing decisions.

SUCH EXAMPLES do not assure that prices for future resources will not rise but they do serve to indicate that increases are not inevitable.

achieve a minimum of grace and meaning is by doing so. They also dislike slang, imagining it to be debasing to the language, when in point of fact slang continually re-vivifies and animates a language.

By obscuring the difference between what is important and what is unimportant in grammar, the prigs and pedants have succeeded in making most people uneasy about their speech, and finally indifferent to real lapses, as opposed to merely formal ones.

WHO BUT A stuffy grammarian would ever say, "It is we," instead of "it's us"? The first is technically correct, but indefensible in speech; while the latter has a noble lineage dating back to 1849. Robert Louis Stevenson, an elegant stylist if there ever was one, wrote: "It's us must break the treaty when the time comes."

Don't construe this, by any means, as a defense of the sloppy, semi-articulate English most people use today. But it's hardly their fault. They were taught the subject so badly that, as they say, they could care less.

George Robeson An inscrutable fortune-cookie

ALL OF US have met born losers. Most of us have felt that the label fit us at more than a time or two.

But when it comes out in a Chinese fortune cookie, that's rough.

The wife of a friend of mine opened a fortune cookie at a party the other day. Boy, is she a born loser.

She showed it to me later. Her fortune, from a cookie selected very carefully, rather than at random, said:

"Your efforts will result in..." The next two words are blurred out.

That can drive a horoscope fan nuts. I have the fortune-slip, and I cannot make out the words to determine what result her efforts will have.

A careful examination of the two hopelessly blurred words would indicate to me that her efforts will result in "Myron's Report." And I told her so.

"How did you know about Myron?" she blurted. In a joking manner, I guess.

Passing this fortune for a whole day among many people to find out what the results of her efforts might be, I get the following conclusions, all of them with perfectly straight faces:

"Many profits." "Myron's profits." (I knew somebody else would see "Myron" on that slip of paper. Why doesn't she know that if she is fooling around with this guy, SHE should get the profits?)

And "Mixed Peanuts" was another entry. That's absurd, she's a Republican. Another opinion of the blurred words was "Much Deposit."

That's what a dog leaves on your lawn. That's a lousy fortune. The poor chick is going out of her mind with concern over this. I want the Umeya Rice Cake Co. of Los Angeles, the distributors of this cookie occult, to explain what their Great Seer has in store for her.

IF SHE'S REALLY messing with Myron, I don't want to know about it. And why would Myron want to make a report? Maybe he's married, too. On the other hand, could there be a private investigator who is about to do a thing on her called "The Myron Report?"

Have you ever cracked a fortune cookie with happy eagerness, only to find that you couldn't read the last two words? And, particularly, when the first words were, "Your efforts will result in..."

The lady has told me that she intends to make no efforts at all for a while, until things simmer down. In the meantime she intends to study the horoscope on the I.P.T.'s comics page, a page on which it surely belongs.

I didn't have the heart to tell her that her horoscope on the day she cracked her cookie predicts "an unexpected surprise from a friend."

FORTUNES, whether they be in little rice cookies, a palm-reader's eyes or a crystal ball, are designed to be happy. Not puzzling or threatening.

For example, 7,000 miles and several weeks ago, I shook out a "fortune stick" from a little round box at a Buddhist temple. I took the stick that fell to the floor to a monk, who went to a board filled with paper fortunes.

He chose a piece of paper with Chinese characters that matched my stick, and told me that I didn't have to worry about my health anymore, as long as I was more careful about what I drank and ate. And he said my marriage would be happy. If I was careful about what I drank.

I get the same advice from my doctor, and he uses all sorts of expensive instruments.

BUT AT LEAST the monk didn't tell me that "My efforts would result in..." and then tell me that he couldn't read the next two words.

I am not a superstitious man, just a fun-loving sort, but that kind of thing would have shaken me, for sure.

Fortunes are for fun, nothing more. And nothing less. I hope that the lady starts efforting again, and everything works out okay. In the meantime, I have her mysterious fortune in my wallet. She doesn't want to look at it again.

Medicine and you

High altitude malady

An improved treatment for a disorder afflicting some persons who live at high altitudes has been reported to doctors.

Dr. Meir Kryger, researcher at University of Colorado Medical Center, Denver, says the hormonal agent progesterone has been used successfully to treat chronic mountain polycythemia.

Polycythemia is an increase in the number of red blood cells. At high altitudes, because of less oxygen, normal people breathe more. For unknown reasons, however, some high altitude residents, usually male, breathe less than normal. This loss in breathing drive causes the body to produce more red blood cells to carry oxygen.

More red cells changes the consistency of blood to that of molasses, Dr. Kryger says. Thus polycythemia is sometimes known as "thick blood." Symptoms include severe headache and inability to think clearly and to work.

The disease is common in Leadville, Colo., the highest city in the United States, and in the high mountain area of South America.

Previously, only two treatments were used. They were moving to sea level, often impractical, and withdrawing a pint of blood every two weeks for three months.

Since progesterone is responsible for hyperventilation (increased breathing) during pregnancy, Dr. Kryger and his colleagues decided to treat mountain polycythemia with an oral form of this hormone.

Fifteen men in Leadville, all with mountain polycythemia, were chosen for the study. All had been treated previously by blood withdrawal an average of every 58 days.

With progesterone, all 15 subjects had an increase in breathing depth. Although need for oxygen stayed the same, red blood cell production decreased. In more than 15 months of therapy, red cell count was in the normal range. Without this treatment, the men collectively would have required 70 to 100 phlebotomies (blood withdrawals). One patient had to have two phlebotomies when his red cell count rose temporarily.

The research has been reported to the American Lung Association.

Rectal itching

Chronic rectal itching that proves difficult to treat may be caused by six common foods, a doctor says.

The foods are coffee, tea, cola, beer, chocolate and tomatoes.

The itching occurs 24 to 48 hours after a patient consumes one or more of these foods.

However, the itching will disappear spontaneously a few days after the foods are eliminated from the diet. It will not return provided the threshold of the offending food is not exceeded again.

The threshold is the amount of the substance that is consumed two days before the itching reappears.

The offending item or items must be eliminated for about two weeks before testing for the threshold.

Other treatments may be helpful, such as hydrocortisone cream. This will help to control the initial skin irritation. Use of the cream is not necessary if the patient is willing to limit the offending foods in his or her diet.

The report is that of Dr. William G. Friend of the University of Washington, Seattle. Details appear in Diseases of the Colon and Rectum, a medical journal, and a summary can be found in Modern Medicine, a periodical for doctors.

Down with prigs and pedants

What turns many people off on "good English" is prissy English that slavishly follows rules for their own dumb sake. For instance, I was sent a review copy of a new book called "Word Watcher's Handbook."

On the very first page of the introduction, the author presents us with a young man who lost a date with a pretty girl because he said to her, "Well, I'd better get back to work now. I just snuck out to the phone for a minute."

WHAT A FRIGHTFUL prig that little creature was — and so is the author, to my mind. "Snuck" is a marvelous past tense for the verb "sneak" — "I snuck out" is far more vivid and idiomatic than "I sneaked out." Fifty years from now it may be standard English.

I am a stickler for "correct" English when it makes sense and conveys sensibility, not merely when it abjectly follows some obsolete Latin structure that used to be a sign of learning and social status. Bad teachers of "good" English have probably done more harm to our language habits than any other single class of persons.

It is astonishing how many letters I get admonishing me for having ended a sentence with a preposition — this is one of the two or three foolish rules people remember from their schooling, and they imagine it has something to do with proper syntax, which it doesn't.

(Everyone recalls the story of Winston Churchill, that master of our tongue, admonished in the Commons by a pipsqueak for ending one of his sentences with a preposition. "Young man," Churchill replied, "that is the kind of nonsense up with which I will not put.")

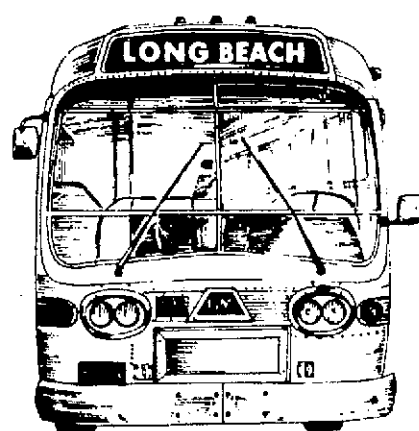

The same people also fret about splitting infinitives, when in many sentences the only possible way to

Roughing it is easy, says author on camping

Dian Thomas is a camper, a home economics teacher at Brigham Young University and an author of "Roughing It Easy," Parts 1 and 2. Her innovative outdoor techniques, mostly do-it-yourself ideas, made her first camping book a national bestseller. She recently talked about camping with a staff writer.

Q. Have Americans become so urbanized that they can't even fend for themselves outdoors?

A. Yes. If you go to anyone over 65 and talk about some of the ideas I have about camping in my books, those people say: "Hey, that's how I used to do it." They had to rough it. Our generation has had no exposure to having to do that and we have no confidence in our ability to do it now. The plus about learning to camp is that, in case of an emergency or power outage, you can make an adventure out of it rather than say, "I can't live without my telephone . . ."

Q. Has the high cost of commercial camping gear intimidated some would-be campers?

A. I think so, but many just looked for ways to do it without spending the money. That's a real key. For example in your backyard — you don't need a barbecue, just get a wheelbarrow and fill it full of dirt, put coals in there and wheel it in and out. It's much handier than a barbecue. You can make a little spit by stacking bricks on each side, and adding or taking them away to adjust the heat. A little creativity means a lot more fun than trying to pump up a Coleman stove.

Q. How cheaply can a family of four, starting out without much equipment, vacation in the outdoors?

A. You'd have no more expense than your food, really. You can improvise and do a little makeshifting. The inexpensive way to get a tent is to buy tube tents, which are plastic tubing, and hang them between trees. Sleeping bags you can make, but I'd buy one. They're not expensive unless you go for the real backpacking specials.

Q and A

Q. What about the recent move toward recreational vehicles and trailers — has that altered what camping used to be all about?

A. I don't think so. Those people are getting out and enjoying the outdoors where they wouldn't ordinarily do anything. The people who are backpackers are going to do their thing, anyway, so RVs really just opened up camping to a lot of people. There's room for everyone out there.

Q. Do people react differently to one another out of doors?

A. Yes, it's amazing. You'll find if you go to a hotel people will hardly ever say anything to the people next door. But go to a camping ground and it doesn't take five minutes to find out "Oh, that person's from Alaska," or whatever. It's basically the same situation, except there are no walls there. Remove the walls and people like to go out of their way to talk to one another.

Q. What happens to people when they go camping?

A. They appreciate what we have a lot more. It gives you an opportunity to look into yourself, into the flowers and wildlife. And people seem to get to know each other better. You always remember that camping trip with someone, whereas if you just have them over to your house in a few months it fades away because it's like everything else you do.

Q. Is camping as much a part of the American family today as it was when you were growing up?

A. Even more so. People want to share the outdoors with their families.

Q. Is spending too much on food the most common mistake?

A. By far. Freeze-dried food is really expensive. I bought a package that made 1½ cups of macaroni for $1.50 and then I made the same package myself at home and it cost me 25 cents. You can dehydrate food and make beef jerky at home at a fraction of the cost.

Q. You said in one of your books preparing the food and equipment for a camping trip can be almost as much fun as the trip. How?

A. It's a great time to get your family together to make things — a tuna-fish-can stove, for instance, that allows you to cook dinner. You can learn how to boil water in a paper cup or cook breakfast on your car manifold. Kids get excited about that and it is fun. Start with backyard camping. Roast apples instead of hot dogs. Cook dinner in a muffin pan, cook fish in a wet newspaper. That's what I wanted to show people how to do in the books. Camping is anything you want to make it.

Triggerman gets real bang out of the 4th

By Mark Gladstone
Staff Writer

David Jenkins gets a real bang out of the Fourth of July.

For one night each year, he is a triggerman, a choreographer of lights. Tonight will be that special night for Jenkins, a Long Beach Fire Department engineer who for the past six years has been the overseer of the Long Beach Fire Fighters Association fireworks show at Veterans Stadium.

Jenkins, 38 — and a fireman for 15 years — spent part of Sunday preparing himself for the 36-minute, 22-second show by listening to a tape recording that has the cues for when to ignite each of the fireworks.

As a boy, Jenkins watched fireworks from Signal Hill. He had no idea how they worked.

After joining the fire department, he volunteered to be a clown at the Fourth of July show. Then he got interested in the fireworks and helped another fireman with the show.

After taking a class and a test, he received a pyrotechnic license from the state fire marshal.

"It is dangerous. That's why we have schooling," he said Sunday during an interview at his Cerritos home.

Despite the danger, Jenkins says, "it's thrilling, it's exciting."

Jenkins and the association contract with a Rialto firm for the fireworks and design of the show. Jenkins and other fire department volunteers will set it up today.

Long Beach fireworks displays at Veterans Stadium and on the beach will start at 9 p.m. tonight. The show at the stadium costs $1 per person. The beach fireworks, to be set off from Shoreline Drive near the Long Beach Arena, are free.

There are two kinds of fireworks: set-ups that display scenes and rockets shot into the air. This year the set-ups will display scenes from American history. The others are shot from a mortar. Both kinds are lighted with a road flare.

Even though he has a good time, Jenkins says, "I think I'm getting too old for this." His wife, Marie, concurs. She says she shudders each time there is a dud or a rocket doesn't go off.

Funds 'wasted,' L.A. Grand Jury says

ALTHOUGH none of the diversion programs were mentioned by name, a local program sponsored by Supervisor James Hayes is attempting to provide 14- to 20-year-old Hawaiian Gardens and Pomona gang members with employment, on-the-job training and special assistance in school.

The program is being funded with $200,000 of Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA) monies as a base for providing jobs.

In addition to cost evaluation of the programs, none of which was specifically mentioned in the report, grand jurors probed other areas of handling young offenders, such as child abuse, and juvenile facilities.

The Grand Jury recommended the Board of Supervisors look into the possibility of initiating a Child Sexual Abuse Treatment Program (CSTAP) similar to one being successfully operated in Santa Clara County.

TO THIS end, the panel advised that a qualified person be given permission by supervisors to apply for admission to a training program for juvenile case officers.

Grand jurors supported the experimental Juvenile Justice Center which houses several agencies involved in litigation of juvenile cases.

If the results of an independent evaluation show that the intended goals of the center had been reached successfully, the grand jury recommended "adequate planning to expand the concept county-wide."

The center, located on the corner of 76th Street and South Central Avenue in Los Angeles, houses two fully-staffed courtrooms, workers for the probation department, public defender, California Youth Authority (CYA) and police and sheriff officials, among others.

THE REPORT said the decentralized justice plan is designed to speed up the processing of juvenile cases, and most are resolved within 48 hours.

The panelists studied costs resulting from lengthy waiting periods before a ward of the court is handed over to the custody of the CYA.

During a three-month period, grand jurors found 152 juveniles declared court wards waited an average of 23 days in county juvenile hall before being transferred to a CYA facility.

The cost to taxpayers was an estimated $206,159 — $58.97 per day per juvenile.

A procedure to shorten the processing time would be the assignment of a CYA officer empowered to accept and process the ward's legal documents.

This would eliminate the approximate 10-day mail lag between Los Angeles and Sacramento, the jury said.

It also recommended that supervisors order the probation department to develop its own procedures for shortening the process.

Additionally, the grand jury recognized that the current Juvenile Court Law "should be updated to conform with current court philosophy, policies and procedures," and recommended that county supervisors request the governor to appoint a commission to study revision of that law.

The new Orange County Grand Jury will meet Tuesday to organize and decide on its work schedule for the 1977-78 fiscal year.

For the first time in the county's history, women dominate the grand jury membership, 11 to 8.

Henry A. Webber, 67, a retired banker living in Santa Ana, was named foreman by Santa Ana Superior Court Judge H. Warren Knight, in whose court the 30 prospective jurors assembled for a ceremonial drawing of 19 names for the grand jury.

Other members include: Manuel V. Barron, 49, machinist, Santa Ana; Kay T. Durbin, 42, instructional aide in Fountain Valley schools, Westminster; Lucille T. Francis, 50, surgical technician, of Santa Ana; Lucila O. Laing, 47, homemaker, of Westminster; Mary H.

Roa, 42, homemaker, Santa Ana;

Others are Ruth E. Finley, 53, homemaker, Huntington Beach; Margot K. Frost, 41, homemaker, Huntington Beach; Geraldine A. West, 47, real estate broker, Seal Beach; Grace H. Winchell, 39, homemaker, Huntington Beach;

George M. Beech, 61, Pacific Telephone district manager, Yorba Linda; Virginia Donohugh, 47,

Lemon Heights; Joe E. Greve, 64, retired, Mission Viejo; James L. Gleason, 69, retired, Orange;

James R. Jansen, 61, electrical technician, Anaheim; Shirley Modiano, 55, homemaker, Anaheim; Barbara L. Heiser, at 31 the youngest juror on the panel; Alex Schvarz, 63, retired telephone company executive Newport Beach, and John A. Storch, 60, property manager, Newport Beach.

Cypress woman new O.C. manpower chief

The first woman member of the Orange County Manpower Commission has recently been appointed its chairman.

Vickie M. Evans of Cypress, 31, is also a just-appointed member of the California Employment and Training Advisory Council and a member of the Regional Adult Vocational Education Council of the North Orange County Community College District — which has a far-flung vocational training program.

She also is active in many civic and community organizations, including the Cypress Chamber of Commerce and Jayceettes, the Rocking Horse Guild of Children's Hospital, and the Parent-Teacher Association.

Other Manpower Commission officers are Rito Madrid of Anaheim, vice president; and A.H. "Bill" Gallardo of Santa Ana, secretary.

Madrid, an Anaheim businessman, is a former president of the Lions Club there. He helped found the Orange County Property Owners' Association and served as its president.

Gallardo, a staff representative for the California Federation of Labor, is state chairman of the National Labor Council for Latin-American Advancement.

Ex-LBSU president retires

Dr. Carl W. McIntosh, former president of Long Beach State University, has retired as president of Montana State University in Bozeman.

McIntosh was LBSU president from 1959-69. He

He conferred degrees on students for the 31st and last time at MSU's recent graduation.

The Montana regents conferred the rank of president emeritus on McIntosh.

Their resolution stated that McIntosh inspired "high performance from his colleagues and has fully dedicated himself to the tasks at hand."

"We commend him for being the personification of what is meant when we say 'gentleman and scholar,'" their resolution stated.

Abigail McCarthy finds own limelight

...as author of novel on Washington

By Ann Wood
Knight News Service

WASHINGTON — Abigail McCarthy has written a Washington novel, "Circles," that reads like the minutes of a sorority meeting aboard the Titanic. But if the women involved, and there are a lot, seem silly to cling to little social habits while their world rocks, the sadness and shake-up of their lives are real.

Mrs. McCarthy, an intelligent writer and a gracious person, has been through it. Her husband, former Sen. Eugene McCarthy, drifted off to the company of another intelligent, gracious woman, 20 years younger, one of the hazards of being a Senate wife, the most exclusive women's club in the world.

She touched on the subject in her autobiography, "Private Faces — Public Faces," but she is still too fond of her friends to use her considerable talent to tell their stories frankly.

Senate wives are dependent, with their husbands, on the approval of the folks back home every six years, and they are dependent on their marriages for their high social status here. There are the exceptions, of course, like Mieke Tunney, Ethel Kennedy and Abigail McCarthy who've had to make lives for themselves, and have done so.

Mrs. McCarthy has written about some of the less visible passages Senate wives face. There's "Emily Webber," the wife of a retiring senior senator, who weeps when the women gather at the end of a farewell dinner, grieving for the life she is losing.

SEPARATING THE sexes after formal dinners is a relic of the generation Mrs. McCarthy knows best, and she describes its uses and a well-known protest against it.

The dissatisfied women striving for identity are best illustrated by "Bitsy Pryor," who is relieved that her husband will not run for President because she would have to give up her television show. A maverick wife, hired to do an interview show because she was a senator's wife, she turned out to be good at it.

The other Senate wives know she is one of a new breed. "Bitsy's frankness had made them all uneasy," Mrs. McCarthy writes. "They think women don't say these things. . . at least not wives. That had been what was wrong when Bitsy spoke up at dinner. She had sounded just like another man joining the conversation. The men had not liked it in a wife — or the women either."

Perhaps when Mrs. McCarthy no longer yearns for a life in that world, she will write a candid Washington book. Since "Circles" is dedicated to her four children — "the very best people I know" — there's hope that she will make that final passage from the old ways.

Dear Abby

Don't support rendezvous

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I have a friend who is married with two small babies. This man brings his girlfriends over to our house. We are good friends with both him and his wife.

I feel that by allowing this man to bring his girlfriend here, we are condoning his actions.

Should we just tell him bluntly that he can do as he pleases, but not in our house? My husband says his wife knows what's going on, and as long as she doesn't care, why should we?

Should I find out if his wife really knows? And if she knows and doesn't care, should it matter?

I still don't like the idea of a married man breaking his marriage vows on our sofa. What do you think? — A FRIEND TO BOTH

DEAR FRIEND: If he's breaking his marriage vows on your sofa, whether his wife knows or not is beside the point. Since you disapprove of his conduct, don't make it any easier for him by providing him with a place to rendezvous.

DEAR ABBY: I am an independent grocer with a question for you. Why do some customers (including relatives) ask for groceries on credit, but when they have the cash they will drive an extra mile to shop at a supermarket and give their money to strangers?

The people they give cash to wouldn't give them groceries on credit if their whole family was dying of malnutrition. — FED UP WITH PEOPLE

DEAR FED UP: There are two kinds of people in this world: The givers and the takers. The credit customers (including your relatives) who spend their cash elsewhere are "takers." You may complain, but the next time someone is broke and needs groceries on credit, you won't turn him down, because you are a "giver." The takers may eat better, but the givers sleep better.

DEAR ABBY: Before the wedding "X" promised to give up cigarettes.

For the first three years after our marriage, he was still smoking, and when I would gently remind him of his promise, he would tell me that he was "trying" and I should be a little more patient.

We have been married for eight years now, and this turkey is still puffing away, only he tries to hide it from me.

His deceit irritates me more than the smoking itself.

How much longer should I be patient? And do you think he ever sincerely tried to quit? — DISGUSTED IN CALIF.

DEAR DISGUSTED: Give him until the Fourth of July, and if he's still smoking — fireworks! I have no way of knowing if he sincerely tried. Perhaps he did. I'm told it's harder to quit smoking than to quit drinking.

CONFIDENTIAL TO "THE KENOSHA KID": Be patient. Dessert is never the first course.

Everyone has a problem. What's yours? For a personal reply, write to ABBY: Box, No. 69700, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. Enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope, please.

...as D.C. Press Club guest

By Virginia Weldon Kelly

Abigail McCarthy's first novel, "Circles," which was published a few days ago, already has been sold out in Washington and Chicago.

Always modest, she asserts mildly, "I hope the bookstores will order 'Circles' again. There seems to be a demand for it."

She is a remarkable woman, whose life for many years was focused on her husband, former Sen. Eugene McCarthy, and his political career. The energies of the entire family, including their four children, were directed toward the fulfillment of his dream — stopping the Vietnam War and attaining the Presidency.

The former senator left home in 1969. No one knows why. Some members of the press believe he drank in too much flattery from young Sycophants. Abigail has never criticized him but if directly asked, she speaks of him quietly but sadly as if he had gone into a distant country.

They have never been divorced. Both are devout Catholics. In his youth, he was a seminarian preparing for the priesthood.

WHEN SHE spoke at the Washington Press Club, Abigail said she thinks the press is too attentive to the marriages of people in public office. She believes the media should give more attention to the issue, "The press in politics." That is, in part, what her novel is about.

"Circles relates the story of three generations of women and the roles they play in political life and how they come to terms with life in Washington and in Massachusetts. One of the focal points of the novel is the efforts of a senator to become president.

Abigail says firmly the book is not autobiographical and that the newspaperwoman is not Helen Thomas (member of the White House Press Corps for United Press International) nor is the newspaperman Martin Agronsky (Washington columnist).

Mrs. McCarthy admits she becomes frustrated when people insist on giving her carefully developed fictional characters the names of Washington people. She said she described an imaginary dinner given by Boston's real life Mayor Kevin White, and then became frightened, but the mayor said it was all right.

Abigail said she stopped work on a book about women she was writing to work on "Circles." She had hesitated to write the novel because Washington novels usually have one-dimensional characters who move beneath the great proscenium arch of the stage of history which dwarfs them.

She also admits she is disquieted by the power of the media. She spoke of one event in President Carter's campaign. He had already begun to speak when it was discovered that one of the television networks had just arrived. Candidate Carter began again so the network could film.

Asked if she was shocked when Pat Caddell's 51-page memo to Presidential candidate Jimmy Carter was leaked to the press (the memo showed how the candidate was "programmed" to win), Abigail said, "Perhaps this is the only way anyone can win now. I doubt if Lincoln could be elected today because he had a high, squeaky voice and a history of depression."

ABIGAIL TOLD reporters, "You have changed objective journalism to personal journalism. Julie Eisenhower calls it 'psychoanalyzing journalism' . . . I think exploration of journalism and its involvement is necessary . . . It is also time to study hostesses who guess right politically, and political aides who 'latch on to' a candidate who looks like a winner . . . Jacques Maritain said 'all virtue is hypocrisy, all personality is a theatrical mask' . . .

"Basically we share an unwarranted cynicism about all important matters. This was evident in the 1968 campaign when idealistic young people became quickly disillusioned."

In being interviewed, she said she has found there is no common experience. She charges that the press has unfortunately imperilled "common allusions," in that many of the press and public no longer share a knowledge of the Bible, Shakespeare, and other great literature which always has served as a shared basis for allusion.

She quoted David Broder, a Washington reporter, who has coined the phrase, "life style politics," in reporting that California's Gov. Jerry Brown, a former Jesuit seminarian, can deal with the "gay" issue more easily than President Carter and Vice President Mondale, who were reared in the fundamentalist Christian ethic."

ABIGAIL MCCARTHY said she is relishing her role in journalism as a columnist for "Commonweal" and one of a group of seven women, which includes former Ambassador Clare Booth Luce, who write a syndicated column.

She gave her first press criticism, she said, at the age of 7 when she told her father, who owned a small newspaper in Minnesota, that he should change the front page of his paper to look like the front page of St. Paul papers.

Asked again about the reported unhappiness of political wives, Abigail said that all men pour much of their emotional energy into their professional lives. It is advisable, she believes, that women prepare themselves for careers although a mother with several children must give a total of 20 years to their care.

"At 40," she explained, "a woman can still expect to have 30 or 40 more years of productive life." She added she thinks the situation of women is worsening because 10 years ago they earned 63 per cent of what men earn, whereas in 1977, women earn only 57 per cent of what men earn.

"Women," she said, "must explore the issues that divide them. We can see that the Equal Rights Amendment has been completely stopped."

Pat's Pointers

These designs are easy to crochet

By Pat Trexler

Crochet a multi-color stole in a wavy combination of high and low crochet stitches or an abbreviated, ribbon-trimmed bolero. Both are easy and interesting to make.

The stole is worked in sports weight yarn while the bolero is done in knitting worsted weight. Bolero directions are for small, medium and large.

To obtain directions, send your request for Leaflet No. PC-465 with 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler, P.O. Box 810, North Myrtle Beach, S.C. 29582

DEAR PAT:

Can you tell me how to work a "crossed double crochet?" I remember doing the stitch years ago and liking it very much. However, I can't find the instructions and can't seem to figure it out for myself.

TAMMY R., CLEVELAND.
DEAR TAMMY:

It is a fascinating stitch and one that appears more difficult than it is. Basically, you skip one stitch, double crochet in the next stitch and the double crochet is the skipped stitch. This creates the crossed effect.

To work a sample swatch, chain an uneven number of stitches. For Row One, which is your foundation row, work a double crochet in the fourth chain from the hook; then go back and double crochet in the third chain from the hook.

Skip one chain, double crochet in next chain, then double crochet in the skipped chain (one cross stitch made.) Repeat from to the last chain. End row with a double crochet in the last chain. Chain 2 and turn.

Row two: Not counting the stitch under the turning chain, skip the next double crochet and start a cross stitch in the following stitch. Work cross stitches all across row, ending with a double crochet in the top of the turning chain. Chain 2, turn.

When the row is completed, chain two and turn. You may just repeat Row 2 over and over for the desired length.

Or, you might like to alternate the cross stitch rows with rows of single, half-double or straight double crochet stitches.

AS IT IS often more difficult to work a pattern stitch from a chain instead of from an established foundation row, I prefer to make the foundation row with whatever straight stitch I am planning to use between the cross stitch rows.

In other words, if I am using half-double crochet between the cross stitch rows, my foundation row would be of the half-double stitch. If you work in this manner, just be sure to have an even number of stitches on your foundation row.

I have also seen directions for the cross stitch in which you are told to work from the back for the second double crochet of each cross stitch.

To work in this manner, you pass the hook behind the first double crochet, then yarn over, bring the hook forward and complete the double crochet.

This creates a more tightly crossed stitch. Which is best? That's a purely personal preference.

Try them both and see which you prefer. The first method is perhaps a bit easier to do.

THE MULTI-COLOR stole or ribbon-trimmed bolero are both easy to crochet.

J.O. Tobin, Shoe Swaps winners

Slew proves he's human, finishes 4th

Undeclared Triple Crown champion Seattle Slew faced champion rider Bill Shoemaker Sunday and didn't even come away second best.

Shoemaker, who had won 1,943 races at Hollywood Park before the $316,400 Swaps Stakes, rode J.O. Tobin to a surprise eight-length victory over runnerup Text, with Seattle Slew a stunning 16 lengths further back for fourth place.

Affiliate was third, a nose behind Text. Seattle Slew went into the race with a perfect lifetime record of 9-0.

A crowd of 68,115 bet $659,742 on Slew in a park record single-race handle of $882,948.

"I knew we were beat into the first turn," said Jean Cruguet, who rode Seattle Slew to victory in the Kentucky Derby, the Preakness and Belmont Stakes—the triple crown.

"He just wasn't himself today — at least in the race," said the French-born jockey. "He was fine warming up and the track was okay. He didn't have any trouble handling it, he just didn't fire."

Shoemaker sent J.O. Tobin to the lead as the 3-year-olds broke from the starting gate and kept the former English champion colt in front for the duration of the 1 1/4-mile race.

J.O. Tobin set a stakes record of 1:58 1/2, just two-fifths of a second off the track record by Quack in 1972. By comparison, Seattle Slew's winning time for the Kentucky Derby, at the same distance, was 2:02 1/2.

"He broke like a bullet," said The Shoe of J.O. Tobin. "I planned to have him in second going around the turn, but I didn't want to hold him back after he got off so well."

"I've had confidence in this horse all along," said Shoemaker.

J.O. Tobin, who campaigned in England as a 2-year-old was only fifth in the Preakness.

"In the Preakness, he broke badly and in the backstretch he was behind five horses," Shoemaker said Sunday.

"I really figured he had a good chance of beating Seattle Slew," continued Shoemaker. "He's got it all together now."

Seattle Slew's owners, Karen and Mickey Taylor, and trainer Billy Turner, unaccustomed to the agony of defeat, disappeared immediately after the race and weren't available for comment.

J.O. Tobin returned $8.20, $3.60 and $4.20. Affiliate paid $7.80 and $5.20, the same show price Text paid.

There was a photo finish for second and third and also an inquiry at the conclusion of the race, which put the second and third placings in question. The stewards let the results stand after studying the films.

Slew went off at 1-5 odds.

Johnny Adams, the 67-year-old trainer of the colt which beat Seattle Slew and himself the national riding champ in 1937, 1942 and 1943, said he "just told Shoe to use his own judgement and ride the race the way it came up."

Shoemaker won his 124th race worth $100,000 or more.

Seattle Slew drew rounds of applause from the huge Hollywood Park crowd but instead of parading by the grandstand three times, as usual, he went all the way

Bailey may try baseball in Japan

This may be the final year of major league baseball for Long Beach's Bob Bailey.

"I've talked to some people about playing in Japan, and that's where I think I'll play my last two or three years of baseball," says Bailey. "At least you can say I'm thinking about it very seriously."

Bailey isn't angry at the Cincinnati Reds, with whom he is performing in a reserve role.

"I just think playing in Japan would be an interesting experience," he says.

Naturally, Bailey would prefer to be playing every day, but he recognizes that the Reds are loaded with talent.

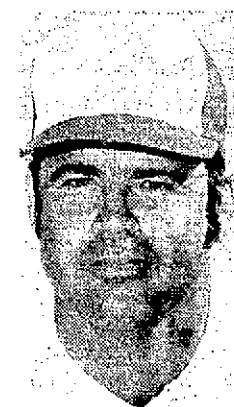

"There are four potential Hall of Fame players on this team in Pete Rose, Johnny Bench, Joe Morgan and Ken Griffey," he says. "Tom Seaver is another one."

At 34, Bailey believes he could be playing regularly with another club.

"There's no doubt in my mind I could do it," he says.

Over the winter, Bailey will manage the San Pedro team in the Puerto Rican league.

"It'll be something new," he says. "I'm looking forward to it."

HANDY ANDY: After retiring 17 batters in a row during the course of a winning effort in Atlanta, Dodger pitcher Don Sutton was discussing how he had done it.

"I really didn't have good stuff tonight," he said. "But I didn't walk anybody and my change-of-pace kept them off-balance."

Sutton paid his respects to former Dodger and Angel pitcher Andy Messersmith, who had been his mound foe that evening.

"I credit Messersmith with teaching me a change-up," he said. "For nine years, no one had been able to show me how to throw a good one."

"But during spring training three or four years ago, Andy taught me one in 15 minutes. I owe a lot to him."

ARE THEY LOSERS? Infielder Rick Auerbach was with the Dodgers when they blew leads in 1973, '75 and '76.

Now he's with the Cincinnati Reds.

He was asked if the Dodgers, who led the National League West by 13 1/2 games in May, would blow again.

"There's still a lot of baseball to be played," he said. "I saw 'em do it three times when I was with 'em. Maybe they can do it again."

SPUNKY SPARKY: Cincinnati manager Sparky Anderson is forever needling the Dodgers.

"Saying we're going to catch the Dodgers and doing it are two different things," he says. "But they had better not blow it this time because they aren't going to have the lead in 1978."

Anderson has the start of '78 race all figured out.

"There are a lot of open dates early in the season and that's going to permit me to use Tom Seaver for many of those April and May games, just like the Angels spotted Frank Tanana and Nolan Ryan this year."

"The Dodgers will never get ahead of us with Seaver pitching many of those early games. And we got a kid down in Indianapolis by the name of Mario Soto who is going to be a great one."

"With those two guys pitching for us, the Dodgers can forget about jumping out to a big lead."

Sparky doesn't hide the purpose of much of what he says.

"I think psychological warfare is important in baseball," he says.

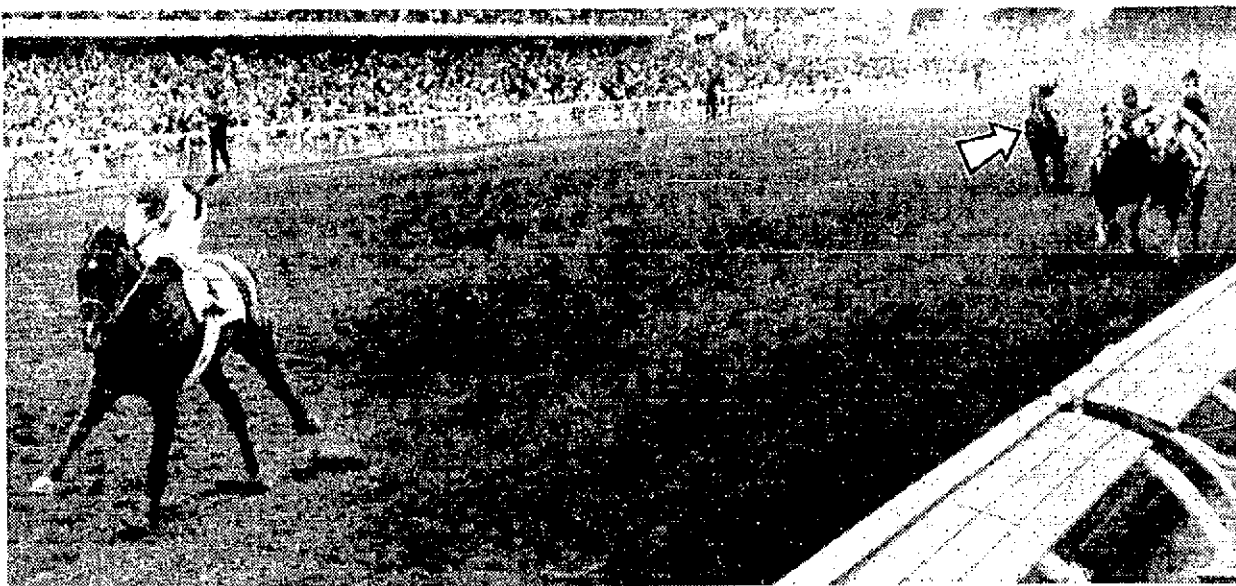

MORGAN MEN: Al Campanis, Dodger vice president for player personnel, was leading a roundtable discussion.

"Which player do you think Cincinnati could least afford to lose?" Campanis asked.

Sports writers went 100 per cent for second baseman Joe Morgan.

"Dave Concepcion," said Dodger manager Tom Lasorda.

Bettors Stones' world standard Russian teen wonder soars 7-7 3/4

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Vladimir Yashchenko, a confident teen-aged Soviet athlete, shattered the world high jump record Sunday, clearing 7 feet 7 3/4 inches and then narrowly missed three times at 7-8 1/2.

The official leap by Yashchenko, who disdains the flop style of high jumping, eclipsed by one-half inch the previous record of 7-7 1/4 set in 1976 by Dwight Stones of the United States at Philadelphia.

The stirring performance came at the sixth annual USSR-USA Junior Track Meet at the University of Richmond and helped salvage some pride for the young Soviet track team, which was badly beaten by the United States' youngsters.

"I was feeling that I was ready for this," said the wiry, blond-haired Yashchenko, who stands 6-3 1/2 and weighs 175 pounds. He spoke through an interpreter.

Yashchenko had already won the high jump at 7-7 when the bar was raised to 7-7 1/4. He cleared the record height on his first effort.

Then the bar was raised to 7-8 1/2 for the student from the Soviet Sports Institute near Kiev.

Yashchenko's knee struck the bar on the way down on the first try at 7-8 1/2. His body hit the bar coming down on his second team. On the third effort, he hit the bar going up.

"I felt I could do it," said Yashchenko. "I felt it was possible."

Yashchenko, unlike most of today's best high jumpers, still uses the old straddle technique.

Asked why he preferred the straddle instead of the flop style which was popularized by Dick Fosbury of the United States at the Mexico City Olympics in 1968 and now copied by many current high jumpers, Yashchenko replied: "I started jumping like that and I don't want to change."

Yashchenko said he was ready for a world record after he cleared 7-5 1/2 earlier this year, his previous best showing.

So excited that he could hardly talk, Yashchenko, asked whether he had always felt he could set a record, said, "Not always. But I felt like it today."

The slender youth hesitated momentarily before answering a question on whether he had patterned himself after any other high jumper.

Dodgers ooze confidence after dismantling Giants

By Gordon Verrell
Staff Writer

SAN FRANCISCO — The Dodgers of '77 are scoring more runs, winning more games, hitting more home runs and, frankly, playing better baseball than any Dodger team in a decade.

"That's our goal," says first baseman Steve Garvey, "to be the best Los Angeles Dodger team ever."

What about being the best Dodger team — Brooklyn or otherwise — ever?

"We've got a chance at that, too," he said, not batting an eye.

The San Francisco Giants probably think that is already the case.

The Dodgers peppered the Giants again Sunday, winning this time 10-7, with a season-high 18 hits. In the three games in Candlestick, this is what they've accomplished:

- A team batting average of .384 (48-for-125).
- Thirty runs.
- Sixteen extra base hits, including seven doubles, six triples and three home runs.

The Dodgers have won seven of their last eight games, 15 of 20 and, in San Francisco, 11 in a row over two seasons.

Their lead is also back to 9 1/2 games in the National League West and it's a lead the Dodgers are confident of retaining.

"Can we be caught?" said Garvey, repeating the question. "Sure, we can be caught. But the possibilities certainly are slim."

Ron Cey had five of the Dodgers' 18 hits and drove in four runs, giving him 69 for the season.

Garvey drove in three runs with a triple and a single to improve his league-leading RBI count to 76.

He says winning the RBI title is not necessarily a personal goal, but he adds: "Sure, I'd like to win it, and if I do, I believe that would insure us winning the division."

"With Ron and myself driving in runs, we're simply scoring more."

The Dodgers have now scored 430 runs in 79 games — two games shy of the midway point in the season — and at the same time ago they'd produced 313.

One thing, though, they failed to hit a home run for the first time in nine games.

Even Garvey, who had slugged 13 homers in 21 games, was blanked.

"I took a day off," he said with a smile. "I used to take months off."

For Cey, the month of July — so far, at least — has been April all over again.

He's collected eight hits in 14 at-bats in the three games this month and has driven in eight runs. He set a major league record in April with 29 RBI.

Tanana gets 12th win for birthday present

By Tracy Ringolsby
Staff Writer

The Captain and Tanana debuted at Anaheim Stadium Sunday afternoon.

They were a hit.

Left-hander Frank Tanana, celebrating his 24th birthday, and Angel captain Jerry Remy combined to serenade the Angels and their fans with the sweet sounds of a 6-4 win over Oakland.

Tanana, played the lead, surviving a couple of shaky innings to hurl his 13th complete game and become become baseball's first 12-game winner.

In Tanana's earlier starts, Joe Rudi provided most of the offensive support, but he is out with a broken hand. Remy filled in Sunday, belting his second home run, a two-run shot in the third, and lining a run-scoring single to right in the seventh.

The only bad notes Tanana hit were in the seventh — when he gave up a two-run home run to Earl Williams — and the ninth, when the A's parlayed two hits and an error into their final two runs.

"I wouldn't feel like it was a game if I didn't give up at least one (home run)," said Tanana, who has allowed 13 roundtrippers in 19 starts and still has a microscopic 1.89 earned run average.

"I'd guess at least half the runs I have given up have been because of home runs," said Tanana, who has allowed 34 earned runs, 18 of which came via homers. "But that is going to happen when you are always around the strike zone."

Tanana was around the strike zone in his latest outing, walking only two and striking out 12 in leading the Angels to only their second win in 10 meetings with the lowly A's.

Also providing Tanana with run-producing accompaniment were Gil Flores, who hit his first major league home run with Willie Aikens aboard in the second, and Aikens, who singled to drive in Tony Solaita with the first run of the game.

It was all sweet music to Tanana. In the 28 innings he had pitched, prior to the three-run second inning Sunday, the Angels had scored only one run and he had lost three of his four previous starts.

"It scared me in the ninth," Tanana said the A's last-ditch rally. "I did not want to blow that lead after they got me six runs."

"We needed this too much. It got us back to .500 (37-37). Now, we just have to put something together."

It would be nice if the Angels could put some kind of team together. So far, injuries have prevented them from that. Rudi is out for a couple of weeks with the broken hand, and Bobby Grich underwent back surgery Sunday. He won't be back until next year.

On top of that, the Angels had to play Sunday without rightfielder Bobby Bonds, who had virtually carried them for the past six weeks. Bonds had an impacted wisdom tooth removed and was not feeling very good.

Buckner's three-run homer helps Cubs snap slump, 4-0

Associated Press

"It's going to be a long season. You don't win pennants in July," said a tired, perspiring and gimpy-legged Bill Buckner of the Chicago Cubs.

The Cubs made no claims to a championship on Sunday, but they did interrupt their midseason skid when Buckner, sore ankle and all, pounded a three-run homer to help dump St. Louis, 4-0.

"We don't have a lot of home run hitters; we don't have a lot of speed; we just have to play heads-up ball to win," said Buckner following Chicago's first victory in five games.

"It's been an enjoyable season; it's been fun seeing a winning attitude catching on," said the former Dodger.

Chicago's victory, helping the Cubs remain 5½ games ahead of Philadelphia in the National League East, was witnessed by a Busch Stadium crowd of 42,885.

Buckner's blow came on a 2-2 pitch off Al Hrabosky, who had relieved Eric Rasmussen following singles by winning pitcher Bruce Sutter (4-1) and Greg Gross. It was the first major league hit for Sutter.

St. Louis had loaded the bases in the seventh inning on two-out singles by Ted Simmons and Keith Hernandez, followed by a walk to Ken Reitz. Sutter walked Reitz in relief of starter Rick Reuschel but worked out of the jam by fanning Jerry Mumphrey.

Reuschel restricted the Cards to two singles and set down 15 batters in a row before Simmons singled up the middle in the seventh with the game scoreless.

"I'm relaxed and I'm comfortable," he said when asked if he's heading into another of his sizzling streaks. "There have been guys on base when I'm at bat and that makes it more exciting."

"We're all playing well and

Dodger of day

RON CEY had five hits and four RBI in 10-7 victory over Giants.

we're taking advantage of what's been given to us."

What's been handed them in Candlestick is a San Francisco team riddled with injuries. The Giants are forced to employ players in strange positions and the results are just as strange.

Darrell Evans was asked to play leftfield Saturday night and he contributed three misplays, all of which the Dodgers parlayed into runs.

Sunday it was Gary Thomasson who was sent out to play centerfield. Twice he played singles into extra base hits and he also erred.

What was particularly embarrassing was the fact that the fabled Willie Mays was among the Candlestick Park audience of 33,251, a participant in an Oldtimers Day affair.

The Giants might have fared better with their oldtimers.

The Dodgers leaped into a 4-0 lead in the first inning and by the sixth they led by eight runs, 10-2.

Tommy John, the starter, left after six innings when his arm stiffened at that point.

Charlie Hough's knuckleball was as wild as the winds of Candlestick and, because of it, the Giants were able to get within three runs.

John, now 34, maintained it was the wind, nothing more, that forced him from the game.

"Nah, the arm is fine," he insisted afterward. "It was the wind and the cold . . . and the long innings when we got all those runs. It was a very uncomfortable day out there."

A year ago, John's comeback season, he didn't win his ninth game until September. What he has hopes for this season is pitching in a World Series, something he missed in 1974 when his arm fell apart halfway through his finest year.

"Every guy's goal is to pitch in a World Series," he said. "Sure, it was tough sitting there watching in '74, not being a part of it."

"This year? You bet I'll be there . . . if the epoxy holds the arm together."

DODGER DOPE — John says his goal is 100 strikeouts. He's more than halfway there with 53. The Giants' Bill Madlock has a streak of seven consecutive games for protesting a called third strike. . . There's still life in the Dodger-Giant rivalry. The two clubs

Tim Tolman of USC drove in two runs with a double in the top of the 14th inning Sunday to give the United States College All-Stars a 5-3 victory over Japan before 1,750 fans at Dedeaux Field.

The victory gives the USA a 2-0 lead in the sixth college all-star baseball series between the two countries.

Hernandez followed with his ground-ball single into right field and the Cubs removed Reuschel, who had formed a blister on his pitching hand.

Elsewhere in the National League, San Diego overcame a 5-0 deficit to edge Cincinnati, 8-7; Philadelphia outslug Pittsburgh, 11-7; Montreal beat New York, 4-2; and, Houston trounced Atlanta, 9-3.

Dave Kingman had his biggest game for the Padres, driving in five runs with a single and his 11th home run.

Trailing 5-0 after two and one-half innings, Kingman's bases-loaded single in the third highlighted a three-run rally off Cincinnati right-hander Jack Billingham to pull the Padres within 5-3.

In the sixth, after Dave Winfield's sacrifice fly tied the game at 5-5, Kingman followed with a three-run homer to put San Diego ahead and knock Billingham from the box.

It was only the second win in the last 12 games for the Padres.

"I'm enjoying San Diego more every day," said a smiling Kingman. "There isn't the pressure on me here that there was in New York because there are guys throughout the Padres' lineup capable of hitting the ball out of the park."

Richie Hebner and Greg Luzinski each drove in three runs as the Phillies completed a four-game sweep of the Pirates.

SCHRADER—

"I'm a Morgan man," said Campanis. "He gives you five things — he can run, field, hit for average, hit for power and he provides leadership."

Lasorda countered: "I'm not saying Concepcion is a better ballplayer than Morgan. I'm saying the Reds could least afford to lose him. Danny Knight could fill in very adequately at second base, but who could come close to replacing Concepcion and his fielding?"

Lasorda had a good point.

CRUM REBORN: The first hint that UCLA athletic director J.D. Morgan might be considering Denny Crum as the Bruins' new basketball coach emerged early last week.

Asked if past feuds with Crum might bar his candidacy, Morgan replied: "We've battled as opponents but I cherish his friendship. Stuff about us not getting along is the biggest bunch of gobbledegook I've ever heard."

Morgan has been busy. He not only contacted North Carolina's Dean Smith, who mulled over the opportunity for a week or so before dropping out of the race, but also spoke with North Carolina State coach Norm Sloan, whose team won the 1975 NCAA championship.

Crum reportedly asked Morgan to guarantee him a television show and a new car, benefits he already has as head coach at the University of Louisville.

SUMMER FUN: High school and college basketball leagues are providing excitement at Long Beach City College.

High school teams play on Wednesday and Friday of each week. Going into the third week, Poly and St. Anthony are 4-0, and Millikan and Jordan are 3-1. Wilson is 3-2 and Rolling Hills, Lakewood and Marina are 0-4.

Outstanding players chosen for the first three nights of action were Moby Oliver of Jordan, Doug Marty of Millikan and Mike Ramsey of St. Anthony. Marty had 42 points against Marina.

Games will be held Wednesday and Friday of this week and on July 13. Playoff action is scheduled for July 15, 20, 22 and 27.

College teams play each Tuesday night. Going into the fifth week, Santa Monica leads with a 3-0 record. Cerritos is 3-1, Long Beach City College Vikings are 3-1, Cypress is 2-1, Harbor is 2-2 and Rio Hondo, Orange Coast, LBCC Norsemen and the Orange County All-Stars are 1-3.

Bill Fraser may have the best freshman talent the school has ever gathered at Long Beach City College.

His newcomers are Sherman Johnson, Millikan; Dino Gregory, Poly; Craig Dykema, Lakewood; Lance Dietrich, St. Anthony; Rich Boatright, Millikan; Ed Brown, Millikan; Mark Oberjuege, Wilson; Dewayne Campbell, Jordan, and Todd Bachman, Poly.

James Hughes and Ken Scott are talented holdover and the Vikings also will be joined by Gary Johnson, who played at Cal Baptist last season.

Connors won't say Borg No. 1

Wimbledon runnerup Jimmy Connors hit back Sunday at claims that champion Bjorn Borg now is the No. 1 tennis player in the world.

Before boarding a Chicago-bound flight at London's Heathrow Airport, Connors, said, "Borg can believe what he wants to believe. To me it does not matter. I do not care who is No. 1 — too much emphasis is put on it."

"Anyway, we are only half-way through the season. Some you win, some you lose. I am not disappointed."

Trans-Atlantic crossing bogs down

American speedboat champion Bob Magoon has given up hope of breaking the record for a trans-Atlantic crossing, but still plans to continue the trip.

Magoon and his two-man crew left Sao Miguel, The Azores Sunday morning in their 36-foot power boat. A leaking fuel tank, rain and strong head-winds caused the boat to run out of fuel 90 miles east of Sao Miguel Saturday. Taken under tow by a Danish freighter and later a Portuguese naval vessel, the boat reached Sao Miguel at 11 p.m. EDT Saturday night, nearly 24 hours behind schedule.

He now hopes to reach Nantucket, R.I. by Tuesday.

Soviets miffed at who U.S. sent

Soviet officials are showing some irritation over the fact that the United States failed again to send its top athletes to compete in the 15th U.S.-Russian track meet over the weekend.

"We want the meets to be like the early days when the strongest athletes competed," said chief Soviet coach Nikolai L. Politiko. "We want to see your best stars. We want to see Stones, Wilkins, Williams, just as you want to see our top athletes."

The Russians won the two-day meet which concluded Saturday, 207-171, against a young American team that was minus much of the U.S.'s top track talent.

Kincaid resignation under study

Wally Kincaid's recent resignation as head baseball coach at Cerritos College due to a back problem is still being closely studied by the school's Board of Trustees.

"We'll ask Mr. Kincaid to attend our meeting this week to talk over the possibility of retaining him as our baseball coach," said board president Lou Banas. "With his outstanding record at Cerritos (621-141) we want to do everything possible to keep him," he added.

Kincaid, 51, was forced to submit his resignation due to a lower back pain injury. If there is no possibility of Kincaid's return, one of the things to be discussed at the closed meeting Wednesday would be whether to fill the position from within the current staff or open a new faculty position.

Eichelberger's win wet, close and rare

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Dave Eichelberger broke a logjam with a birdie on his 34th hole Sunday, then held on for a two-stroke victory over Morris Hatafsky, Gary McCord and Mike Morley in the rain-plagued $130,000 Greater Milwaukee Open Golf Tournament.

Eichelberger, whose only other victory in 11 years on the tour came here in 1971, finished with a final round 70, two under par over the wet, windy Tuckaway Country Club course. He won $25,000.

Eichelberger shot a 69 in the third round earlier Sunday and finished at 278, or 10 under par for the meet. A Thursday down-pour had delayed the first round by one day, forcing the 36-hole windup. Then the first 18-hole round Sunday was delayed an hour and 48 minutes because of rain.

Hatafsky, a second year pro who earned just $249 last year, and Eichelberger were tied at nine under for the meet when Hatafsky three putted his final hole for a bogey.

Eichelberger, playing two holes behind, birdied his 16th moments later to go 10 under, and parred his last two holes.

Hatafsky, one ahead after 27 holes Sunday, finished with a final round 70. Morley birdied two of his last three holes for a closing 71, and McCord had a final round 68.

Eichelberger, 33, scrambled for his clutch birdie after his tee shot on No. 16 of the final round landed in the rough to the left.

He blasted a 3-iron 40 yards short of the 550-yard, par five hole, but his sand iron pitch shot rolled down the green and rested six feet short of the hole. He sank the putt.

"I didn't know I was in the lead until two holes later, the 18th, when my caddie told me I was 10 under," he said. "So I hit an 8-iron and just tried to keep in on the fairway."

Eichelberger won $108,312 the year of his victory here, but had slumped to $24,689 for this year until Sunday.

"Three or four years ago, I was wondering if I would ever win another tournament," he said. "But the last two years I've been hitting the ball better. The last few weeks, I just tried to see how many times I could get my name on the leader board. I've been playing better, and it helped my confidence."

Phantom leads Transpac ships

Phantom, a 66-foot sloop skippered by Tony Delfino of Marina Del Rey, took over the elapsed time lead Sunday after 19 hours of sailing in the 29th Biannual Transpacific Yacht Race.

Based on 8 a.m. position reports, Phantom, had logged 203 miles and was sailing in a 15-to 17-knot northwesterly breeze.

Second in the Los Angeles to Honolulu race was Drifter, Harry Molosheo's 69-foot sloop, of Long Beach, with 166 miles logged. The 69-foot catch Kialoa, sailed by Don Kilroy of Los Angeles, was the early leader in the race but dropped to third place at 162 miles from the start.

Merlin, Bill Lee's 67-foot from Santa Cruz, was sixth among elapsed time leaders, and had traveled 160 miles.

Nalu 4, a 48-foot sloop sailed by Larry Burgin of Santa Cruz, was 128 miles from the start, ranking fifth in class A and 44th overall.

The race began Saturday at 1 p.m. from Point Fermin, just west of the Los Angeles Harbor entrance.

Watson's gas problem means win for Mario

DIJON, France (AP) — Mario Andretti of Nazareth, Pa., trailing front-runner John Watson for much of the race, overtook the Briton when his car began to run out of gas on the last lap Sunday to win the French Grand Prix Formula 1 auto race.

A similar gas shortage cost Andretti a win in Switzerland two weeks ago.

"There was no way I could have beaten Watson without his problem," Andretti said. "He had more speed down the straightaway and I couldn't out-brake him into the main passing corner."

It was Andretti's third win this year in the JPS-Lotus and tied him for second in the race for the world drivers championship, only one point behind the new leader, former champion Niki Lauda of Austria, 33-32, with eight races remaining.

Watson withstood Andretti from the 17th lap to mid-point in the final 80th lap of the 188.8-mile race, held in brilliant sunshine before 60,000 spectators.

Andretti, who set a lap record of 1:13.75, was clocked in one hour 39 minutes 40.13 seconds for an average speed of 113.715 mph. Watson was 1.55 seconds behind.

1. Mario Andretti, Nazareth, Pa., JPS-Lotus, 1 hour 39 minutes 40.13 seconds; average speed, 113.715 miles per hour.
2. John Watson, Britain, Brabham Alfa Romeo, 1:39.41.8.
3. James Hunt, Britain, McLaren M20, 1:40.14.0.
4. Gunnar Nilsson, Sweden, JPS Lotus, 1:40.51.2.
5. Niki Lauda, Austria, Ferrari, 1:40.54.9.
6. Carlos Reutemann, Argentina, Ferrari, one lap behind.
7. Clay Regazzoni, Switzerland, Ensign, one lap.
8. Jacques Laffite, France, Ligier-Matra, two laps.
9. Jochen Mass, Germany, McLaren M20, two laps.
10. Rupert Keegan, Britain, Hesketh, two laps.
11. Emerson Fittipaldi, Brazil, Cooper-Carver, three laps.
12. Ronnie Peterson, Sweden, Tyrrell, three laps.
13. Vittorio Brambilla, Italy, Surtees, three laps.

World Drivers Championship standings:
1. Niki Lauda, Austria, 30 points; 2. Mario Andretti, Nazareth, Pa., 27; 3. Jody Scheckter, South Africa, 25; 4. Carlos Reutemann, Argentina, 20; 5. Gunnar Nilsson, Sweden, 17; 6. James Hunt, Britain, 12; 7. Jochen Mass, Germany, 11; 8. Patrick Depailler, France, 10; 9. (tie) John Watson, Britain, and Jacques Laffite, France, 9 each.

74 earns Rankin $12,000

LACHUTE, Que. (AP) — Judy Rankin, continuing her domination of the Ladies' Professional Golf Association tour, fired a 74 Sunday to capture the top prize of $12,000 in the Peter Jackson Classic, the lone Canadian event on the LPGA tour.

Despite the fact she was plagued by a poor putting effort on the front nine, Mrs. Rankin finished the tournament with a four-under-par 212.

Tied for second, three shots back, were Pat Meyers and Sandra Palmer at 215, one under par.

With her victory at the 6,300-yard, par 72 layout at the Lachute Golf and Country Club's No. 1 course, Mrs. Rankin now has won $82,508 on the tour this season.

It was one of those days for Cruguet

Jean Cruguet should have known Sunday it was going to be a tough day when he tried to gain admittance to the Turf Club at Hollywood Park without wearing a tie.

Seattle Slew's jockey had no credentials and was not wearing a tie when he attempted to get his wife into the Turf Club to join Seattle Slew's owners before the Swaps Stakes.

Following an exchange of words, Cruguet and the questioning usher became involved in a shoving match. Track officers responded.

When Cruguet finally was identified, he was escorted to the jockeys' quarters and his wife was taken to the table of Mr. and Mrs. Mickey Taylor and Dr. and Mrs. James Hill.

Mario home before race over on TV

Mario Andretti was planning to watch himself on television winning Sunday's French Grand Prix — back home in Nazareth, Pa. the same night.

Andretti helicoptered from the circuit to Paris to pick up the Concorde supersonic airliner to Washington. His own plane was waiting there and he figured he would be home in Nazareth in time for the last 30 minutes of the televised race.

"Ain't modern technology wonderful," he grinned.

Foyt shows versatility in Mosport road race

MOSPORT, Ont. (AP) —

A.J. Foyt, four-time winner of the Indianapolis 500, waited for the front-runners to run into trouble, then easily won the Diamond Indy auto race by more than one lap Sunday.

The Houston veteran, who qualified seventh on the starting grid Friday before commuting to Daytona Beach, Fla., to qualify for Monday's Firecracker 400 stock car race, finished ahead of Gary Bettenhausen and Tom Sneva.

Foyt's victory was worth $27,400, including contingency prize money. He was penalized one lap for passing the pace car.

While his official time of two hours, three minutes and 35 seconds left him more than one lap ahead of Bettenhausen in a Dragon Offy, officially Foyt finished two seconds in front.

Sneva was next in a McLaren Cosworth.

Foyt, who completed the 186.4-mile race at a speed of 90.733 miles an hour—76 laps around Mosport's 2.459-mile road course—did most of it with a gear shift that was broken early in the race.

"I think it was in the eighth lap that it snapped off," the veteran Texas driver said. "I could only use it in third and fourth gear through the race."

It was only the second of 52 United States Auto Club victories Foyt has won on road course race tracks.

The race was marred by several incidents and 25 laps were run under the yellow caution flag.

Todd Gibson of Richmond, Ohio, in an Eagle Offy, took fourth place. He was followed by Jerry Grant of Irvine, Calif., in an Eagle Foyt; Salt Walther of Drayton, Ohio, in a McLaren DGS, and Ed Crombie, a native of Williams Lake, B.C., the only Canadian driver in the race, in his Eagle Offy.

When both Al Unser and Danny Ongais came to mechanical grief midway through the race, the only pressure Foyt got was from Roger McCluskey's Lightning Offy before it was forced to quit with a blown engine in the 64th lap.

Two more women qualify for race

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — European drivers Lella Lombardi and Christine Beckers were among 21 drivers who qualified their cars on the last day of qualifying Sunday for today's $175,000 Firecracker 400 stock car race.

A third female driver, Janet Guthrie, secured a berth in time trials Saturday.

Miss Lombardi stood on her speed of 130.115 miles per hour from Saturday, and that was good enough for 29th. Miss Beckers upped her speed to 175.425 Sunday for 37th.

Neil Bonnett won the pole position Saturday with a speed of 187.191.

"Richard Petty and Buddy Baker told me I was too slow in the corners on Saturday," said the petite 3-foot-2 Miss Beckers, a five-time Belgian women's champion. "I was feeling my way along. Now I understand it's all right to go up (the banking). Now I'm beginning to feel comfortable in the car."

"Janet Guthrie said she was willing to show us about drafting. I thought that was quite nice. She seems quite happy we are here."

Miss Lombardi, a one-time truck driver in her native Italy and the only female ever to earn Formula 1 world championship points, said through an interpreter, "At first the car seemed too fast, then it was just right; now it's not fast enough for me."

Sunday's quickest qualifier was 1976 Grand National rookie of the year Skip Manning at 181.957 in a Chevrolet.

Two July 4th specials on CBS tonight

NEW YORK (NYTS) — The Fourth of July schedule is hardly overflowing with special programs. Among the commercial networks, only CBS is recognizing the holiday with new productions, and one of them has been gleaned from old film footage.

"Our Happiest Birthday" offers highlights from CBS News coverage of last year's Bicentennial celebrations. Once again the anchorman is Walter Cronkite, who sits at his special Bicentennial desk recalling memorable moments from the daylong celebrations.

Beginning with fireworks at Fort McHenry in the early hours of the morning, the festivities wend their way to more fireworks in the evening around the Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor. Still obviously awed, Cronkite refers to much of the hoopla as "brassy, zany and, yes, corny, too."

There is some new material in this souvenir essay. Abigail Matthews, who was born on that Bicentennial Fourth, is seen standing in her playpen nearly a year later. And then there is the splendid spectacle of New York's Operation Sail, the international parade of the tall ships. They are seen again going up the Hudson River, against the wind, but they are also shown coming downwind on the return trip, something that was not seen last year because of "insufficient time."

Immediately following "Our Happiest Birthday" on CBS tonight is "They Said It With Music: Yankee Doodle to Ragtime," a two-hour salute to American songs from 1776 to the first decades of this century. Created and conceived by the late Goddard Lieberson, the program attempts to "show us as we were and, therefore, as we are," through the fascinating vehicle of popular music.
